PCs Bid To Form Cabinet

PRINCE ALBERT (CP)—Conservative Leader Diefenbaker said today if Prime Minister Pearson "intends to stay to meet Parliament there will be a strong challenge immediately on the question of integrity."

He told reporters the parliamentary challenge will cover a variety of things besides the Dorion inquiry into the Lucien Rivard scandal. He said other parties have spoken strongly on this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker said if the government should be defeated on a motion of this type, "It would be the duty of the prime minister to ask the governor-general to see if another party could form a government."

On the question of integrity in government, "this is one matter" on which Social Credit Leader Thompson has spoken very definitely, Mr. Diefenbaker said.

NDP Leader Douglas has been equally strong and so has Creditiste Leader Real Caouette.

Amplifying on remarks he made in a television appearance Monday, Mr. Diefenbaker said it was "a piece of effrontery" for Mr. Pearson to say that if he did not get a majority there would be an election in a year or 18 months.

DENIES RIGHT

Mr. Pearson had no constitutional right to give this advice to the governor-general, but must advise the governor-general there is another party that can form a government, he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker, wearing a sweater under a grey business suit, met reporters in his private railway car just before lunch.

He was "rather surprised at the failure of the NDP with all the power they claim they possess in electing so few members."

He noted they had fewer seats than in 1945 when they got 28, and in 1957, when they elected 25.

"It is very obvious socialism has no appeal to the Canadian people."

Mr. Diefenbaker said he could not recall any parliamentary parallel to Monday's election outcome.

He said that in the United Kingdom in the 1846-1885 period there were a number of "uncertain" elections and a number of minority governments. But in the past, "never has there been a government stay in power with no representation in three provinces and one each in two."

Mr. Diefenbaker added: "The

'ELECTORS SPOKE' —PEARSON

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson, his Liberal party virtually halted in its track by the Canadian voters, hid his disappointment Monday night and cheerfully said that Parliament would be carried on in the best interests of Canada.

There was no doubt about his disappointment. He already had a minority government and he called the election for the express purpose of gaining a majority.

"I think it's a disappointing result — naturally — because we campaigned on the issue of majority government," he said.

"The electors . . . have spoken."

The 68-year-old prime minister had gone through a long, tense day, suffering from the aftermath of flu. He was tired from the campaign that had taken him 23,000 miles by air alone and the results of his efforts gave him little joy.

"But I am gratified that there were more Liberals elected than any other party," he said into a bank of television cameras just before midnight.

NOT BITTER

He showed no bitterness over his failure to get the majority.

A reporter reminded the prime minister that he had said he didn't want to head another minority government; that he would prefer someone else to do so.

"Yes, I expressed a preference for that," he replied. "But you don't always get your first preference.

"At the moment, I am still the prime minister and leader of the government and we'll leave it at that."

Barring a major victory for either the Liberals or Conservatives, many observers suggested during the campaign that this would probably be the last election for both Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker.

HAD SETBACKS

Since Mr. Pearson became Liberal leader in 1957, he has experienced some massive ups and downs at the polls, but Monday's stand - pat results were easily the most disappointing.

When the Diefenbaker tornado of 1958 left Mr. Pearson's Liberals with only 48 seats, compared with the 105 they held previously, the resounding defeat was not surprising and the relatively new leader was not held responsible.

In 1962, the Liberals under Mr. Pearson more than doubled their representation to 99. A year later they formed a minority government with 129.

At dissolution, the Liberals were down to 127 and this campaign, costing untold millions, nudged them back to where they were two years ago.

All Parties Disappointed

(Times News Services)

Prime Minister Lester Pearson has been denied the "clear majority" he sought from the Canadian electorate in an election that took from him two of his cabinet ministers, put his own future in question, and set the possibility of another national vote within two years—or sooner.

Early today a still game, but bitterly disappointed Pearson saw these final results:

Liberals 129, Conservatives 99, New Democrats 21, Social Credit 5, Creditiste 9 and Independent 2.

The Liberals had gained only two seats numerically from the last Parliament—seats they could have won if byelections had been held to fill the four vacancies in the last election—and lost some of their brighter lights.

Only the opposition parties really gained in the vote with most of the glory—but not as much as they had hoped for—going to the New Democrats.

Standings when Pearson dissolved the last 265-seat parliament to seek a majority to "get this country rolling" were:

Liberal 127, Conservative 92, NDP 18, Socreds 9, Creditiste 13 and Independents two. There were four vacancies.

With 96 per cent of the civilian polls reported Monday night, the Liberals had 39 per cent of the popular vote. The Conservatives had 33 per cent, the NDP 18, Creditistes five, Social Credit four and others one.

With all seats reported, an astonishing 223 of the 265 seats showed no political change from 1963.

There remained a possibility that some narrowly-won victories might be reversed when results of the armed services vote are announced Saturday and added to the civilian results in each riding. There was almost no chance of this changing the minority situation.

Next Session Expected in January

A new session of Parliament is not expected to be called until early in 1966, probably in January.

The question then will be the willingness or otherwise of the opposition parties to unite on a confidence issue and overthrow the government. If this happened, Mr. Pearson could ask Governor-General Vanier for another dissolution of Parliament or suggest he call in Mr. Diefenbaker to form a government.

As the voters headed to the polls Monday the forecasters were predicting the Liberals would get a 140-seat majority. Pearson himself was confident of a clear margin over all other parties.

What turned the voters against him and yet made them so indecisive in choosing an alternative likely spells the end of the careers of both Pearson and Conservative leader John Diefenbaker.

The same 10 million voters obviously didn't want Pearson to form his long-sought majority, nor did they feel Diefenbaker was the logical alternative.

The same "no" was handed New Democratic Leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas, who had hoped for the first time that his party might stand a chance of forming a government.

The other splinter parties, Social Credit headed by Robert Thompson, and Creditiste by Real Caouette, did no better than expected.

PM to Meet Cabinet Wednesday

Pearson, maintaining a brave front despite obvious personal anguish, said his cabinet will meet Wednesday to study the results and decide on the future.

No longer with that cabinet are Agriculture Minister Harry Hays, defeated in Calgary, and Mines Minister J. Watson McNaught, sent into retirement on Prince Edward Island.

Pearson declined to discuss the possibility of a coalition with the NDP—or his own future.

"I am still prime minister and head of the government and I think I will leave it at that," said Pearson in Ottawa.

Douglas in Burnaby, B.C., ruled out coalition with any other party except in some "unforseen crisis."

Opposition leaders saw no reason why the government even in its minority position couldn't run a full four-year term, but Pearson made it clear his position hadn't changed on the need for a majority government in Canada.

In the campaign, Pearson caused an outburst of objections from all parties when he said that if his party didn't win a majority there would have to be another election in a year or 18 months.

The Liberal hope for a majority was lost early Monday night when the Conservatives made gains in the Maritimes. If they had not made wins along the Atlantic coast, the Liberals would have been in with a strong government.

They also missed out on the increased seats the forecasters said they could get in Quebec, Western Canada and Ontario.

Segregated Voting Slammed by Indians

DUNCAN — Segregated voting in Monday's election here has been sharply criticized by Cowichan Indian band members.

"We should have been able to vote at the same place as the white man," Chief Mike Underwood said today.

Only 57 of 222 eligible Indian voters (25 per cent) cast ballots. In 1963 with integrated voting 86 per cent of the Indians voted.

"The system will have to be changed next time. People resented it," commented tribesman Eddy Elliott.

An exclusive Indian polling station was set up on the reserve to allow Indians to become more familiar with the method of voting said returning officer Fred Spencer.

In the past, Indians voted alongside whites at Duncan armories, said Chief Underwood.

Cowichan Indian agent Ronald Sampson said the principle of segregation was wrong.

"If the reserve is the handiest spot for a polling booth, I would like to see it used by Indians and non-Indians," he said.

LESAGE vs. ROBARTS IN NEXT ELECTION?

TORONTO (CP)—Will it be Lesage vs. Robarts the next time?

Some insiders in the two main parties figure that neither Prime Minister Pearson nor Conservative Leader Diefenbaker will be around for the next federal general election whenever it may come.

They say the likely choices for the next round are Liberal Premier Jean Lesage of Quebec and Conservative Premier John Robarts of Ontario.

'NEITHER WANTED AS PRIME MINISTER'

Dief, Pearson Out, Says Writer

An Election Interpretive

By PETER NEWMAN

The judgment of the Canadian people was harsh and final: They do not want either Lester Pearsor or John Diefenbaker as their prime minister.

In their fourth confrontation, neither party leader was able to make any impression in the other's stronghold. The Conservatives are back with one seat in the nation's two largest cities — Montreal and Toronto. The Liberals are down to one seat in the prairie provinces.

No national government can properly represent the nation's various interests under these conditions. It is now clear beyond any doubt that only a change in the leadership of both parties can solve the impasse.

The Liberal party must choose a leader who will have appeal in the west, as well as commanding either through himself or an appropriate lieutenant, the respect and support of the new Quebec.

URBAN AREAS

The Conservative party must find and elect a leader who can find resonance with the nation's dynamic urban areas. This is particularly urgent for the Tories, because the next election will take place following the redistribution of constituencies which will give the cities much greater proportional importance.

The pattern of the election results — the rejection of both Pearson and Diefenbaker by large blocs of regional voters—makes it clear that with different leaders either party could have carved out a handy majority. (If this had not been the case, the NDP and Socred share of the votes would have been a great deal larger.)

It's far too early to predict who these new Conservative and Liberal leaders might be, but some factors bearing on their choice did emerge out of Monday's astonishing results:

In the Liberal party, Walter Gordon and his left-wing activities have lost a great deal of prestige. It was at their urging that this election was called, and it was on their platform and strategy that it was fought.

Unless Lester Pearson exerts his considerable personal prestige in the opposite direction, the Liberal party could well be inherited by its "old guard."

MARTIN LEADS

The immediate prospect is for a handover to Paul Martin.

Two other men are definitely in the running: Mitchell Sharp, who stands in the ideological middle and could win support from some of the party's left wingers, and Robert Winters, the former St. Laurent minister, who staged a successful political comeback in Toronto.

The state of succession in the Conservative party is even more obscure. For one thing, the job isn't likely to fall open in the foreseeable future. John Diefenbaker's magnificent campaign has earned him the right, which no member of his party can now deny, to choose the time of his retirement.

Right now, George Hees is the front-runner among the

NDP Scotches Coalition Talk

BURNABY (CP) — T. C. Douglas Monday night brushed aside talk of a coalition between the Liberals and his New Democratic Party and laid down preliminary conditions for supporting another minority government.

Mr. Douglas said in an interview a minority administration would not have to implement the entire NDP platform, but must offer good legislation to improve the way of life of Canadians.

The national NDP leader said a coalition was out of the question except in "some unforseen crisis."

Declining to detail conditions for NDP support, Mr. Douglas said, however, he would put up a major battle in the Commons if there is any attempt to water down the recommendations of the Hall royal commission on health services.

During the latter stages of the campaign, Mr. Douglas said Prime Minister Pearson had tossed away two important essentials of the Hall report. Mr. Pearson was prepared to give private insurance carriers a role and had backed down on providing medical insurance for everyone at the outset.

PREMIER KEEPS ON SMILING

'People Rejected Pearson, He Must Resign'—Bennett

By JIM HUME

The lights burned late in the Legislative Buildings Monday night.

Premier Bennett, members of his cabinet—and a sprinkling of cabinet ministers' wives—were gathered to discuss the results of the election.

Most of the group were sombre, possibly recalling that the premier's plea "tell them you've had enough" had been largely ignored by the people of British Columbia.

But not Attorney-General Robert Bonner, clad in dark blue parka and lounging with a smile near the rear wall of the premier's office.

And certainly not the premier who welcomed the questions of the press with the happiest of grins.

Was he disappointed that British Columbians had not listened and sent more Social Credit members to Ottawa.

'MAKING HEADWAY'

"No, certainly not. We picked up one additional seat in the province and the popular vote shows that we are making headway."

The future?

"Prime Minister Pearson must resign. He went to the people asking for a majority and they refused to give him that majority. To gain a majority you have to earn it and the Liberals failed to earn it. The Liberals have been repudiated by the people. Mr. Pearson has no alternative but to resign."

'COME A DAY'

The future of Social Credit federally?

"There will come a day when the people will turn to Social Credit. Canadians are small "c" conservatives and were reluctant to change."

From one side of the room a photograph of the premier and Pope Paul smiled benignly on the group.

Opposite smiled a candid shot of President John Kennedy, elected five years ago yesterday, slain three years later on the streets of Dallas, Texas.

And standing out in the trophy-cluttered inner-sanctum one photograph of a Social Credit premier and a Liberal prime minister in happier, allied days.

That's the photograph of Prime Minister Pearson, President Lyndon B. Johnson and Premier W. A. C. Bennett rejoicing that the Columbia River treaty was signed at last.

LONG TIME AGO

But that was a long time ago and the smiles of yesterday had no place in the premier's office Monday night.

"He (Mr. Pearson) has no alternative," the premier said. "The people have turned him down. He must resign."

His cabinet ministers coughed and murmured agreement.

But the light still burned in the Building long after most people had called it a day and headed home into another misty year of minority government.

BONNER ASKS PROBE OF VOTE POLLSTERS

British Columbia Attorney-General Robert Bonner today called for a House of Commons investigation into political polls and pollsters.

At best, he said, political polls are pseudo-scientific predictions.

"As far as I'm concerned, the best thing they could do would be scrap them.

"The polls cast an unnatural light on electioneering. The partisan press takes whatever comfort it can find in a poll and drums it up until a gentle shower sounds like a torrent."

Pacifist Turns Self Into Pillar of Fire

NEW YORK (UPI)—A 22-year-old former seminary student and anti-war fanatic drenched himself with gasoline in front of United Nations headquarters here today and turned himself into a pillar of flame with a match. He was critically injured.

"I am a Catholic worker," murmured Roger Laporte through his blistered lips as he was rushed to a hospital through the empty streets shortly after 5 a.m. "I am anti-war, all wars. I did this as a religious action. I picked this hour so no one could stop me."

As ambulance attendants gingerly loaded him into their vehicle, the young pacifist said his act of self-destruction was a protest against "all the hate in the world."

The fire, which blackened and blistered 95 per cent of the body of Laporte, of Utica, N.Y., melted his rubber sneakers onto the pavement. But Laport, who associated with a group of draft card-burning pacifists, failed to damage his own draft card which he carried in his wallet The 2-S (student) draft card was found on the street when he was rushed to a hospital.

'CAN'T WIN THEM ALL' SAYS PETER

TORONTO (CP)—Peter Reenstreif, the election soothsayer, laughed today when asked where he went wrong in his prediction of Monday's general election.

"You can't win them all," he said. "We pollsters merely try to infer from a small sampling the trend in a whole universe." Mr. Regenstreif, professor of political science and Canadian studies at the University of Rochester, N.Y., predicted at least 137 Liberal seats, probably 10, with 79 for the Progressive Conservatives.

He said he went off base mainly in his rural Quebec sampling.

Court Grants Shop Centre Foreclosure

VANCOUVER (CP)—Former New Westminster mayor Beth Wood, her husband John and son Barry have been given six months to pay off a $40,000 mortgage on shopping centre property in White Rock.

Mr. Justice Munroe, in granting foreclosure to National Holdings Ltd., against Villa Rock Shopping Centre Ltd., refused Monday to reduce the redemption period from the customary six months.

National Trust had asked for a reduced redemption period on the grounds that the defendants had little equity in the property.

The judge noted that the payments were only three months in arrears for a total of $1,500.

K. J. Husgand, appearing for the shopping centre said a national trust company was interested in financing the project.

BEAUSEJOUR, Man. (CP)—A small aircraft was chartered today by the returning officer for Springfield to pick up ballot boxes along Lake Winnipeg before the lake freezes over.

CHINA ON RHODESIA

Negroes Advised To Take Up Arms

PEKING (Reuters)—China today advised Rhodesia's Negros to take up arms and fight for their national independence.

The Peking People's Daily, in the first major Peking statement on the Rhodesian crisis, pledged China's support for the "sacred struggle" of Rhodesia's Negroes.

The editorial echoed the theme of Peking press reports on the Rhodesian situation—that the British government is secretly collaborating with Salisbury to maintain white rule unilateral declaration of independence.

It said the recent visit of British Prime Minister Wilson to Salisbury "shows up the disgusting hypocrisy of British imperialism."

Negroes could win real independence "only through unflinching struggle and not by harboring illusions about imperialism," the editorial said.

Canadian-Built Beaver Planes Set Down at Pole

TORONTO (UPI)—De Havilland of Canada today announced that two of its Beaver aircraft had become the first single engined planes ever to land at the South Pole.

The aircraft manufacturer said the Beavers, operated by the Argentine Air Force, landed at the South Pole Nov. 3.

The planes made an eight-hour flight from General Belgrano Argentine air force base on the Filchner ice shelf about 800 miles from the pole.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

The weather pattern for B.C. has shown little change in the past few days and the skies will remain cloudy in all areas. However, the air over the province is not quite as moist as it was Monday and brief sunny periods were expected. Widely scattered showers will continue in coastal areas. Arctic air still remains over the central interior. The freezing rain which occurred in the Cariboo Monday changed to snow flurries overnight and Prince George had a depth of one inch of snow on the ground early this morning. This will melt today as the temperatures in the Arctic air slowly climb to above freezing.

(Times News Services)

Canadian editorialists reflected much of the forebodings that rippled across much of the country today, in the wake of Monday's general elections.

Whatever their own political leanings, editorials in leading Canadian newspapers expressed gloom that the voters had in effect preserved the status quo—but with a few changes that could be vital in the future.

Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—There should be little comfort for any political party in yesterday's election results. True, the Progressive Conservatives improved their position and showed unexpected strength in Nova Scotia and Quebec. True, the New Democratic Party increased its popular vote, and the Creditistes held up better than expected in Quebec. But these may very well have been more the voters' expression of dissatisfaction than of satisfaction. As for Social Credit this election has all but finished it as a national party. Prime Minister Pearson's Liberals can only consider the result to be defeat. Rather than getting the majority they sought, they are no better off than before the election, and they can expect rougher treatment than ever from the opposition.

If there was a real winner yesterday it must have been the Canadian voter, who showed in the only way he could that he will no longer tolerate the kind of political representation he has been getting.

Toronto Globe and Mail: The Liberal party subjected the electorate to the most sophisticated, the most premeditated, the most cold-blooded blackmail this country has ever seen in an election. . . We shall demand much more of our members of Parliament than the ugly, shallow squabbling for microscopic political ends that has far too often characterized the last two parliaments. They are all on probation before a country that is sick and tired of cynicism and littleness, and that will insist that every manjack of them this time earn his $18,000 a year.

Winnipeg Free Press (Ind. Lib.): As he faces the task of once more forming a minority government Mr. Pearson is confronted by some hard and unpleasant truths. One of these truths is that, despite repeated warnings and danger signals dating from the government's first budget, he has failed to act decisively when everything but his personal loyalty to friends has argued that he should. A second is that he has left far too much power and control in the hands of a small group of elected and non-elected officials whose views are at variance with those of the majority of the Liberal party and the nation as a whole. . . A third hard truth, the most painful of all, is that Mr. Pearson must re-examine his own position as leader of the government and try to decide whether in the not too distant future he should pass the mantle on to younger and stronger hands.

EDMONTON JOURNAL—Mr. Pearson's reckless gamble has proved an utter failure. The cynical double-talk in which he indulged when he called a totally unjustified election . . . has backfired. Mr. Pearson's personal political future has been placed in jeopardy. And, as an infinitely more regrettable development, national unity stands in greater peril than ever with another minority government heavily overweighted by its Quebec representation. . . . No one knows how long the nation will be spared another election. In the next election, it seems unlikely that either Mr. Pearson or Mr. Diefenbaker will lead his party. And a very good thing for Canada that will be.

CALGARY ALBERTAN (Ind. L)—The real loser, we suggest, has been the nation. It has given itself another parliament of minorities, the third in a row. Neither the performance of the last two nor the lessons of history make that a reassuring prospect. . . . It is hard to escape the feeling that our country, while economically healthy, is chronically ill politically.

VANCOUVER PROVINCE (Ind.)—This election . . . proved one thing: Prime Minister Pearson's failure as a national leader. . . . The electorate could not stomach the idea of giving the Pearson administration (with its 30-month record of ineptitude) a go-ahead signal.

. . . If the Liberal administration decides another election is necessary within a short period, Mr. Pearson's days as party leader must be numbered. . . . But with another weak Liberal government the NDP may force through socialistic measures as the price of its support.

Regina Leader-Post (Ind.)—When Prime Minister Pearson announced the election protests were voiced from many quarters that the vote was unnecessary and that he should have waited at least until redistribution had been put into effect. The outcome confirms the validity of this criticism. In consequence, we have another indecisive result, another stalemate. The two welfare gimmicks, the Canada pension plan and the promise of a national medicare plan, failed to have the influence on the electors the Liberal government apparently hoped they would . . . those who succeeded in winning elections should not permit themselves to forget what is painfully evident, that the conduct of the members, and particularly those representing the major parties in the last parliament, was responsible to a large degree in bringing about Monday's indecisive result.

Saint John Telegraph-Journal: The election that nobody wanted had solved nothing . . . the salient thing that emerged from this ill-conceived election is that neither major party leader is strong enough to capture the imagination and full support of the country. Clearly the odds are one or both have fought their last election.

Vancouver Sun (Ind.-Lib): By assuring another minority government, the Canadian election has produced the worst possible result. But its meaning is quite clear: the nation has refused for the third time a vote confidence in any leader or party. Where does that leave us? It leaves us with a Liberal government still in a minority but entitled to meet parliament and hear the verdict which the people failed to deliver. Parliament and only parliament must now decide whether the government shall remain in power or not and on what terms.

Voters Get Tour After Poll Visit

Getting voters to accept free rides to the polls is hard enough.

Getting them home again can be harder.

Weary Tory drivers reported that in several cases, after voting, their passengers asked to be driven to department stores or doctor's offices.

But because these were mainly pensioners who rarely get a chance to ride downtown, said Victoria Conservative manager Foster Isherwood, the drivers complied.

"In most cases the rides were deserving," he said. But there were some who themselves own cars and some who lived only a block from the polls, who also called for transportation.

Mr. Isherwood said his party had a larger working force — 300 to 400 workers and 40 to 60 cars, but there was a rush all day. During the morning the operation was an hour behind and the candidate Clifford Waite even drove a few trips himself.

A Chance to Reconstruct

YESTERDAY'S VOTING RESULTS reflect the continuing national mood of doubt and political distrust. Mr. Pearson has been returned to office, but without the majority support which he sought to enable him to meet future domestic and international problems from a position of strength.

The results may be interpreted as indicating that the people do not want either major party very much and favor the minor parties still less. This is far from a satisfactory situation for a country with Canada's stresses within and commitments without; it reflects little credit on either the parties or the nation.

We may now look forward to a period—to be measured in months or perhaps years—which will largely duplicate the experience of the past two and a half years. The Liberal administration will be able to continue governing, with the support of the NDP or the Creditiste splinters—and with all the handicaps which such disparate forms of assistance must impose. It will be government at the discretion of minority groups, but with a certain promise of strength arising from the reluctance of any group to precipitate another election—at least for a year or two—by defeating the administration.

The tragedy of Canadian politics in this decade is seen once more in the Liberals' shattering lack of support in the West, and in the Conservatives' equally destructive deficiency in Quebec. This results in a sectionalism which detracts from either major party's claim to be fully representative on a nationwide basis. In the case of the Conservatives, of course, the lack of French-Canadian strength is particularly significant.

Mr. Pearson has failed to achieve what he undertook to do—that is, win a majority in parliament. To that extent he has lost political strength personally and for his party. But no other party has made significant numerical gains—and no one can claim an overall victory at Liberal expense. This leaves us where we found ourselves in April, 1963, but the effects this time may be much more far-reaching.

The federal government will soon enter into negotiations with the provinces on constitutional and other issues; it must do so from the relatively weak position of a minority administration. This could have long-lasting significance for the structure of Confederation as it will now be determined.

Mr. Pearson's task emerges clearly. He failed to gain a majority because of lack of confidence in his government. He must now win that confidence by doing what he should have done earlier: he must clean house in his cabinet, remove the deadwood which proved an embarrassment in the last year, and work to restore in the Canadian people a faith in parliament which in recent times has sadly faltered. He now has a new parliament and a new deal, even though not a decisive one, and he should no longer be bound by earlier commitments to any member of his cabinet who does not carry the confidence of the people.

By their conduct and their achievement in the days to come the Liberals have a good opportunity to rebuild nation-wide support. But it can only be done by putting good government before every other consideration.

'No' to Parochialism

THERE IS LITTLE IN THE election results on which Canadians may compliment themselves. There is still a state of national confusion as to leadership and objectives.

But at least the country has avoided the threat raised by Premier Bennett's call to British Columbia to send a strong squad to Ottawa to force the legislative machinery to turn only for this province's benefit. The people have once more thoroughly repudiated Social Credit as a factor in national politics, and even in Quebec Mr. Caouette's Creditiste splinter hangs on only as a fragmented relic of the separatist threat.

The voters may be confused, but they are still determined to reject the unorthodox parties on any national basis.

Locally, where a good turnout at the polls provided an effective answer to earlier charges of public apathy, the people's preference for familiar and proven representatitves was clearly shown.

In Victoria, and in Esquimalt-Saanich, voters returned two members who have ably represented their constituencies and won the people's confidence. Mr. Groos and Mr. Chatterton may reflect with pride on the confidence which has once more been shown in them. Some of the newcomers to the local federal arena made creditable first-time runs, but the incumbents were able to widen their leads almost from the first returns.

Talk Out the Differences

THE COMMITTEE WHICH worked successfully to have a stadium chosen as Greater Victoria's combined centennial project has grave misgivings about the selection of a site on the University of Victoria campus. Spokesmen for the group seek discussions with the municipalities, convinced that once the council members have heard the information the committee says it can provide, the Gordon Head site will be abandoned.

The committee deserves a hearing. The authorities who will eventually establish the stadium should welcome all the information they can receive. Similarly, the committee members who have been so outspoken should welcome—and listen to—the opinion of those who favor the site.

It would be foolish for either group, or any other, to assume an air of omniscience. But if the centennial stadium is to represent the ideal it is supposed to represent, then it should be created in harmony. That spirit can only be promoted by open discussion, which rises above sectional interest and recognizes the project as a truly Greater Victoria amenity.

Dr. Malcolm Taylor, in his earlier comment on the proposal to locate the stadium at Gordon Head, underscored the fact that the offer of a site emphasized the desire of university leaders to encourage community use of the facilities.

The university apparently has no wish to enter into competition for a monopoly on the stadium. Neither should any other group.

Sneaky

PARENTS OF SCHOOL CHILDren are familiar enough with the dialogue in which the adult describes his or her scholastic successes of an earlier day to the son or daughter encountering difficulties in certain subjects.

By coincidence the parent's memory of "A" grades is as bright as the day on which the marks were conferred. Somewhat hazier are the recollections of the low points.

Which makes particularly sneaky the action of a Grade 8, Providence, R.I., boy who has written to Bryant College asking for a record of his father's marks, of which the parent brags.

And it could happen here, too.

FROM LONDON — By RUDOLF KLEIN

Westminster Looks at Itself

THE MOTHER of Parliaments is beginning to show her age. After centuries during which Britons have prided themselves on possesing the most envied and most efficient parliamentary system in the world, an uneasy feeling is now growing that British institutions no longer meet today's needs.

The dissatisfaction has been simmering away for some time now, but the pressure for reform really began to make itself felt only with the election of a new Parliament last year. Not only did this bring into office a government with a small majority, which was therefore interested in devising means of making the parliamentary machine work more efficiently; it also brought into the House of Commons a lot of new Labor MPs who did not look on the place merely as "the best club in the world." As they saw it, they had been elected to do a job of work—and the House of Commons did not provide the means to do it efficiently. They were not greatly impressed by the argument that it is dangerous to tamper with tradition.

Self-Criticism

So now the British are in the middle of a bout of parliamentary introspection and self-criticism. There is a committee considering changes in parliamentary procedure. There is a committee considering what changes are needed in the facilities offered to MPs. There is a committee considering whether Britain's electoral system needs changing.

But although both the government and most backbench MPs are agreed on the need for some changes, there is in practice a conflict of interest between them. The government's main concern is so to streamline procedure as to get more of its measures through Parliament more quickly. The main interest of MPs is to get more opportunities for exercising their own influence over the government's measures and policies.

At present it looks as though the government will concentrate on those changes which will be politically advantageous to itself. For instance, it seems probable that in future sick MPs will be able to vote by proxy. For a government with a majority of three, the expediency of such a reform is obvious enough. Moreover, there are other advantages. The spectacle of sick MPs being brought to Westminster in ambulances for critical votes is one which hardly encourages respect for Parliament.

Modernizing Quarters

But the government is being more cautious in conceding any reforms which would strengthen the influence of individual MPs. Its main concession to backbench opinion has been to speed up the process of modernizing the Palace of Westminster itself—an imitation Gothic pile redolent of a more leisurely age, when legislators were not expected to use it as a place of business or work.

Long corridors stretch in endless mazes through the Palace. Busts and portraits of bygone politicians stand guard. It is all impressive as a kind of historical museum. But it is also fiendishly inconvenient for Members of Parliament.

The great majority of them do not have private offices. At best they have a locker. There is no space where MPs can conveniently dictate to their secretaries. And while some Tory MPs can afford to maintain offices outside the House of Commons, few Labor ones can do so. Hence their demand for reform.

To some extent, this is now being met. The Palace of Westminster has actually been brought under the control of MPs themselves—for strange to say, until now it has always been regarded as a royal palace, and as such beyond the power of parliament itself. An attempt is being made to use the available space more efficiently. And a long term scheme for building an office annnex for MPs is under way.

Executive Administration

All this may be very encouraging for MPs. But there is little sign of any major concessions by the government on the most important of all: strengthening the ability of backbench MPs to scrutinize the executive's administration.

Yet this is at the root of the feeling—vague, ill-defined but widespread—that somehow Parliament is failing in its functions. The trend of the present century has been towards a much stronger executive: no one now expects governments to be turned out by a House of Commons vote. The result is that MPs have come close to feel that they are regarded as so many automatic voting machines.

This may be an exaggerated view. There are many backstairs ways in which MPs can seek to influence government policies—in party meetings, for instance. But this kind of private lobbying is not the monopoly of MPs. It is also carried out (and often more effectively) by, for example, industrial associations and trades unions—who are often consulted by government departments when new legislation is being prepared.

What many MPs want, therefore, is a strengthened system of inquiry into the affairs of the government. They want to be able to find out why the government takes certain decisions, what facts they were based on, etc. — questions which cannot be answered during general debates. They want something less than the American system of congressional committees, with their wide inquisitorial powers, but something more than the committees they have already got.

It may be that, as a result of a typically British compromise, such a system will gradually evolve as a result of adapting the existing committees (which in theory are mostly limited to examining only the financial aspects of government policy). But if so, a great deal of resistance will have to be overcome.

Ministers dislike seeing the power of backbench MPs strengthened. Civil servants resent having to give time up to answering questions. And many MPs themselves (Labor and Conservative) feel that a committee system would blunt the fine edge of party controversy—since MPs, by becoming too specialized and too knowledgeable about the affairs of the department they were examining, might no longer be prepared to pattern their arguments on the simple, dialectical symmetry required in a two-party system of government.

Begs Question

The fear may be well grounded. But it begs the question whether in fact Parliament should still be conducted on the principle of a medieval tournament—with the MPs jousting against each other in single combat and good inevitably triumphing over evil.

If there is disillusionment with Britain's Parliament, it is at least partly because there is a feeling that this kind of tournament produces only mock battles—and that the really interesting and decisive debates are now being conducted privately not in the House of Commons but in the cabinet room, in the Whitehall offices of the civil servants and in the headquarters of the great vested interests of labor and industry.

Cadboro Bay Rezoning

Two years ago a large number of ratepayers attended public hearings to oppose rezoning of residential property and the construction of high-rise apartments in the Cadboro Bay area.

The applicants—and some were so unkind as to call them speculators—contended that they desired only to build in Cadboro Bay itself. Residents rightly dismissed this suggestion on the very obvious grounds that one rezoning would create a precedent, and that the whole of the Gordon Head-Ten-Mile Point area would inevitably become the next target of the "developers." Once one rezoning was permitted in the area, it would be morally impossible to deny others.

The second and far more beguiling contention was that taxes would be dramatically and abruptly reduced. At the same time, unfortunately, they did not disclose who, after the high-rises had reared their ugly heads, was going to pay for the improved roads and sidewalks, the new sewage system, and the additional schools and public parks required to accommodate the increased population.

Through the good offices of our present reeve and of our champion on council, Harold Todd, the application was rejected. Now, however, a fresh assault is under way. A petition is being circulated in Cadboro Bay, soliciting support for rezoning. The pitch is the same: a dramatic reduction in taxes if residents will allow progress to be consummated.

The most intriguing aspect of this petition is that it is being circulated by a young man driving a car bearing California licence plates. Very touching, when you come to think of it, that a Californian should be trying to reduce the burden of the municipal taxpayer in Saanich. And all the time one thought the Americans were indifferent to our problems.—P. Corley-Smith, 2950 Sea Point Drive.

Looking Ahead—Too Far

As a Saanich taxpayer, I would like to see outdoor heated swimming pools for my youngsters, land acquired for future park and stadium use and the reconstruction of McKenzie Avenue as outlined in the 2.7 million dollar capital project. But what I cannot understand, again as a Saanich taxpayer, is why the council doesn't understand the immediate need for work on projects closer to the taxpayer's needs.

For instance, street after street in Saanich is lined on each side by weed-covered ditches, no curbs, no sidewalks, in many cases no street lights, in all too many cases, bumpy patched sorry excuses for roads, and a swampy, trash-covered Gorge Inlet, to name a few. Familiar things to Saanich taxpayers.

The council should be congratulated for looking to the future, but in my opinion, too far.—Mrs. Pat McAlpine, 743 Lily.

TO BE CONTINUED

There are some English domestic struggles that seem to go on and on. There's the eternal love-hate relationship between the universities of Oxford and Cambridge. There's the deadly cricketing rivalry between the counties of Lancashire and Yorkshire. And there's the equally interminable feud at Westminster between the House of Commons and the House of Lords. One thing about all these domestic struggles is that nobody really wants them to end.

FROM PARIS — By ANDREW MULLIGAN

De Gaulle Versus NATO

THE long winter of conflict between General de Gaulle and his NATO allies began last week with the announcement that France will not take part in a special meeting of eight or nine defence ministers fixed for the end of November in Paris. The meeting is to consider ways of giving America's European allies a greater voice in nuclear strategy.

Thus the general is threatening to smash both NATO and the Common Market in their present form. Never have his intentions been so clear. Washington, London and Bonn are determined to stand firm. As one allied diplomat put it: "We believe, in the light of experience from two world wars, that we need more integration, not less."

So French policy and the united policy of America, Britain and West Germany must inevitably crash head on. It is only a question of when.

It seems unlikely that the general will make this policy an issue during the election campaign for the presidency, although he may wrap it up in the guise of a referendum asking the French people to approve his policy of "national independence." Opinion polls show that there is widespread opposition to his foreign policy among the informed elite, and even the uninformed masses, as one French weekly put it, "fail to follow his anti-American and Common Market policies."

What are General de Gaulle's attitudes to NATO? He believes that the alliance is nearing the end of its useful life and that because the Russian threat is diminishing, NATO's role should diminish with it. He disagrees with American strategy in Europe which is now based on the theory of "graduated response" as opposed to "massive nuclear retaliation" which is the strategy of his force de frappe (nuclear force).

General de Gaulle is as determined as the U.S. to retain full control of his forces, dislikes integration on principle, and has never offered to share the French nuclear capability with anyone.

He also believes that SHAPE (Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe) has outlived its usefulness, and that the various European military commands (even those like SACEUR which is commanded by a Frenchman) should be eliminated and replaced by a military planning staff who are confined to the paper work of coordinating planning of each individual ally.

The logical outcome of this is that NATO would be replaced by a loose series of bilateral alliances (like the Franco-German treaty) between the important allies, making no allowances for peripheral NATO allies in Scandinavia and southern Europe.

Incompatible

To have foreign troops or nuclear warheads stationed on French soil is incompatible with General de Gaulle's idea of national independence. One of de Gaulle's first actions when he came to power in 1958 was to banish United States atomic warheads from French soil. Since then he has gradually withdrawn French forces from NATO. He withdrew the French Mediterranean Fleet and then a French air defence squadron assigned to NATO. He diverted French NATO divisions stationed in Germany to Algeria and never replaced them when the Algerian war was over.

The present French commitment in Germany is only two under-strength divisions of about 23,000 men. The French Atlantic Fleet was withdrawn from NATO in 1963 and French forces did not participate in NATO manoeuvres in the same year. In 1964 he withdrew French naval officers from the Channel and Mediterranean commands and recently banned the rebuilding of a U.S. army communications centre and vetoed plans for a new SHAPE headquarters.

In the light of this it is clear what General de Gaulle meant by the statement at his press conference on September 9: "Nineteen sixty-nine will be the end of our subordination to integration which puts our destiny in the hands of foreigners." Between now and 1969, assuming that de Gaulle either implements it himself or ensures the irrevocable continuity of his policy, France may ask the U.S. to withdraw all her forces and installations from French territory.

What would this mean for the Americans?

It would mean rerouting the American supply lines through Northern European ports like Rotterdam, Antwerp and Bremerhaven. It would mean redeploying American's $1,750 million investment in France and finding new quarters for 66,000 military personnel who are currently stationed in France.

Unemployment

It would also mean unemployment for some 12,000 French civilians. Most important of all, such changes in the supply system would necessarily reduce the size of the American Seventh Army forces in Europe. The present supply system includes such permanent installations as oil and jet-fuel pipelines across France. Any other supply system would take years to build up.

SHAPE could be easily moved to Britain and sites could be found at Aachen or Luxembourg for other NATO subsidiary headquarters, but rerouting the supply system would present a key problem. It would be relatively easy to redeploy the remaining four active U.S. Air Force bases in France to other NATO countries, and to close down 10 other air bases on French soil which are maintained but are unused.

The latest French plan is to replace NATO by a European defence force, excluding the United States, an idea published in a quarterly review by the French Centre for the Study of Foreign Policy. Elysee officials deny that the general approved this study but admit that he saw it. The French force de frappe and Britain's RAF would be the spearhead of the defence force.

West Germany would be excluded from all nuclear strategy and in return for having no finger on the nuclear trigger France would provide Germany with a nuclear umbrella and work for Germany's ultimate reunification.

Looking Back

From The Times of Nov. 9, 1905:

Report of proceedings of Victoria Board of Trade at which J. S. Larke, Canadian Trade Commissioner to Australia, spoke. Said Mr. Larke: "One eastern gentleman made the public statement that it was ridiculous for Canadians to think of an export trade, that there was a sufficient home market to consume all the products available.

"Australians wish this were true. They think of Canada as 'the spoiled child' which derives many of the benefits, commercial and other, which should go to Australia." (Laughter.)

It's a Dark, Dreary Day For the 700-Odd Losers

By GERALD WARING

OTTAWA—No matter how brightly the sun is shining where you are, this is a dark and dreary day for an awful lot of politicians and their partisans.

Waring

And so to a great number of good losers we dedicate this column—to party leaders who gave their utmost in a punishing campaign, to 700-odd vanquished candidates including many who would have done well in and by the Commons, and to thousands of citizens who volunteered their services to parties and candidates.

Because this is a sad day for them, let's skip the post-mortems long enough to look at the lighter side of things. Like when George Hees, the gentleman farmer from St. James St., sought to woo the vote of a Northumberland farmer.

"Mighty fine Guesnseys you got there," said Hees admiringly. "Just about the nicest I ever seen."

"Holsteins," the farmer replied laconically. "And the verb form is 'saw'."

★ ★ ★

Both Conservative leader Diefenbaker and Liberal leader Pearson suffered embarrassing memory lapses: They forgot the names of the candidates in whose support they were speaking.

At Brownsburg, Que., Mr. Diefenbaker wound up a speech by asking all present "to send to Ottawa—and I can well use him there—my old friend Roger . . . uh . . . ah . . . and you know and I know that Roger will do a good job as your MP in Ottawa."

In Vancouver Mr. Pearson was extolling "a young man, but a man who already has made his mark, a man who I know will represent you well in Ottawa . . . uh . . . ah . . . your Liberal candidate."

Most of Mr. Diefenbaker's boo-boos were in Quebec. At one meeting he spoke glowingly of Tory candidate Antonio Ricard—only he persisted in calling him Rivard. And at Trois Pistoles he was introduced, in French, to several local Tories: "Ici Monsieur Valiquette." "Comment allez vous, M. Valiquette." "Et M. Blanchard." "Plaisir, M. Blanchard." "Et mon fils (my son)." "Grand plaisir, M. Monfils."

Among the more memorable lines were Socred leader Robert Thompson's declaration that politics should be kept out of the House of Commons, and Tory Frank McGee's comment that "Pearson promised to challenge the bold and test the daring, but he only succeeded in trying the patience."

Even Grits grinned wryly at Tommy Douglas' quip that Mackenzie King had shown the job of prime minister could be a lifetime one, that Diefenbaker had shown anyone could be prime minister, and that Pearson had shown that we don't need a prime minister. But, they point out, that was after Douglas was bitten by that dog in B.C.—not the dog, incidentally, whose name got on the voters' list.

Since comedian Rich Little worked over "My fellow Canadians," Mr. Diefenbaker had dropped that salutation. "Ladies and gentlemen," he started one meeting. Hecklers set up a whoop and holler. Dief swiveled and pointed. "I didn't have you in mind," he said.

Saddest story is of the candidate, a man who rarely takes water neat, who was impersonated by a person in a bar. This miscreant collected free drinks while propounding his "platform" and promising his well-wishers government jobs and other boons after he was elected.

Made the real candidate very angry. And thirsty.

Can You Call Reading A 'Most Essential Art?'

By ART STOTT

"THE ability to read, which we take for granted and treat so casually," says Dr. Kaye Lamb, "is one of the most essential arts that Young Canada can acquire."

Stott

This sentence introduces his patron's message for Young Canada's Book Week starting next Monday. The distinguished and erudite British Columbian, who was born in New Westminster and now holds the post of National Librarian and Dominion Archivist, elaborates his point.

"Thanks to radio, television, moving pictures and the picture magazines," he adds, "we seem to spend most of our time nowadays looking and listening rather than reading. A few people in high educational places have even predicted that reading (and writing too, for that matter) are entering a period of decline."

Then he makes a point for reading. You can pick what you want to read. When you watch and listen, you are usually subjected to something somebody else had selected for you. Your choice is restricted.

This makes pretty good sense. But does it make reading an art? The concept is a little strange to me. I have taken the ability to follow the meaning of words printed on a page to be a very useful access to information, but not an art form in itself. On the other hand, if somebody pushed the button and the surviving monkeys had to start evolving upward into humans again—assuming that monkeys survived the holocaust—reading would be a lost art for quite a time.

I'll accept as art the product of the great writers. To me that is the most understandable art form in existence. And it is understandable only because people can read. So maybe the literature of the ages is art solely because it is a participating activity, with the reader making his contribution as well as the creator. Otherwise all those who set down imperishable words could have been "mute inglorious Miltons."

Okay. But I still don't think reading is an art. Dr. Lamb won't particularly care about my convictions on that score. On the other hand, I do care about the issue he has raised relative to reading being the instrument through which people can choose. And I think it high time that we encouraged the youngsters to make that choice more critical.

Too much of the reading that is offered to us is not worth the eyestrain.

Friends of mine who get around to National Parks more often than I do, usually return home to show me pictures of cheerful and relatively tame bears stumbling around the garbage dumps established for the recreational centres. The animals paw amiably among the refuse, looking for some discarded tidbit here and another there. Close by are usually signs warning people to leave the bears alone. Bruin, according to the story, isn't vicious, but he's apt to take a long-fingernailed swipe at anyone who comes too close when he's rooting around, or he may just hug the tourist a little too vigorously in a gesture of off-handed affection.

It seems to me that you could stretch this into an analogy of what happens to a lot of youngsters turned loose on the dump heap of trash publications. They may be merely looking for a tidbit here or there, but they can become dangerous to the unsuspecting person in the course of their foraging. Also the dump heap diet imparts to them the threat of infection.

Dr. Lamb calls reading an art and he appears to consider it essential because it provides the individual with a means of choice. This could be so, but unless some cultivation is done to refine the choice, mere access to variety isn't going to do much that is constructive. Young Canada, for instance, could make a wide selection in smut from the available material.

I happen to believe that the way to handle this problem is to develop in the young reader a discrimination by which he learns to separate the worthwhile from the worthless in his reading. He should be encouraged to move a shade or two above the bears browsing on the dump heap. And there is any amount of excellent sustenance for him in the better class of reading at hand today.

If he turns to it, as I hope Young Canada's Book Week will encourage him to turn, then he should refine his selectivity still further..

Among what adults take to be acceptable literature there is still a super-abundance of thought content no better than that selected for the consuming public by other media involved in commercial communication.

If there is any hope of reading becoming an art, the critically faculty is the characteristic which will make it so.

Independence for 'Guyana'

By J. HALCRO FERGUSON

LONDON—Within a year it seems that a new South American nation will be born, and called Guyana, but that its conception will be without the co-operation of the leader of its largest political organization.

For when the British Guiana independence conference was held here last week the chair set for Dr. Cheddi Jagan, ex-prime minister and leader of the People's Progressive Party, (PPP) was empty.

Britain invited three delegates and three advisers from each of the self-governing colony's three major parties. The present prime minister, Forbes Burnham, arrived with his colleagues of the People's National Congress, and Peter D'Aguiar brought his colleagues of the right-of-centre United Force Party, which is in coalition with the People's National Congress. Dr. Jagan issued a statement dissociating his party from the proceedings.

Both Founders

Dr. Burnham and Dr. Jagan were both instrumental in founding the original PPP in 1953, on a platform of universal suffrage and prompt independence, but Dr. Jagan's Marxist policies and pronouncements, both as premier and as a popular leader when he had been removed by the British government, alienated Burnham and other party members, who split off and founded their own party in 1958.

Though the original schism was ideological, it rapidly became a racial one, with the bulk of the predominantly urban Negro population supporting Mr. Burnham, and the majority of the predominantly rural "East Indian" population backing Dr. Jagan and his forceful American wife, Janet.

Most Indian

Of British Guiana's 560,000 people—most of them engaged in the cultivation of sugar and rice along the narrow coastal strip to the northwest and southeast of Georgetown—the Indians, numbering 267,000 are the largest and fastest-growing group.

The Africans are the next largest community, with 183,000. Most of the rest of the population consists of Europeans—principally Portuguese and British — Chinese and people of mixed blood. This heterogeneous group is mostly middle class, and its members tend to support Burnham or D'Aguiar rather than Jagah. There are also 25,000 aboriginal Amerindians, who live in the tropical hinterland and are politically negligible, though their interests are looked after by a cabinet minister who at the moment is part Amerindian.

Two Factors

Dr. Jagan's PPP has the largest following of any single party, but was defeated at the last elections by two factors: the PNC-UF coalition, and the British-imposed constitutional amendment which introduced proportional representation, favoring the coalition and causing the PPP to cry foul.

Dr. Jagan insists that proportional representation was brought in under pressure from Washington, which fears "another Cuba" in British Guiana, but the British government firmly denies that the Americans had anything to do with it.

But whatever Jagan thinks, it is plain that the two coalition parties are determined that within a year Guyana—a spelling they prefer — will become a sovereign state, and that the British government is willing to let this come to pass. What happens then depends on the actions of the absent Dr. Jagan, but both Guianese and British seem more confident of the future than would have seemed possible even a year ago.

(London Observer Service)

The answer to the problem of feeding the undernourished millions of Asia, Africa, Latin America and other parts of the world does not lie solely in raising more food. There is also the question of how the purchasing power of people like these residents of an impoverished village in Rhodesia can be raised sufficiently that they can afford a better diet.

Our Starving World: A Statistician's View

By P. V. SUKHATME

(Mr. Sukhatme is director of the statistics division of the United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization. These are excerpts from an article in the Indian and Foreign Review of New Delhi.)

It is a well-known fact that nutritional levels in large parts of Asia, Africa and Latin America are very low and that over the last decade no significant progress has been made in raising them. Increases in food production, substantial as they were, have been largely wiped out by increases in population.

The population is growing at an accelerating rate, adding every year over 50 million people to these areas. Simultaneously, largely arising from growing political consciousness, people are clamoring for improved levels of living, and in particular for more and better food at prices within their reach.

There are many aspects to the problem: the facts about the current level of diet, the inadequacy to ensure a healthy, active life to the people, the number of sufferers from hunger and malnutrition, the immediate need to make good the deficiencies in the diet, the possibilities of raising the needed food, etc.

The salient feature regarding the current levels of diets is that the diet in the poor countries consists predominantly of cereals and starchy roots amounting to an average consumption of nearly 600 grams per person per day.

The rich countries on the other hand, while consuming even a larger quantity of cereals and starchy roots, consume twice as large a quantity of fruits and vegtables and six times as large a quantity of animal products. This large disparity is reflected in the differences in the calorie and nutrient supplies.

Diet Monotonous

This shows that the poor countries consume around 2,150 calories per person per day with 77 per cent of the calories derived from carbohydrate foods (cereals, starchy roots and sugar), emphasising the monotony of the diet for large sections of the population. Against this, the food consumed by the rich countries provides over 3,050 calories per person per day—the share of cereals, starchy roots and sugar being only 57 per cent. More striking is the contrast in animal protein per person per day, which is only one fifth of the consumption per head in the rich countries. The disparity in other nutrients is also large.

How inadequate are the current levels of diet? To answer this question we must first define hunger. The term covers both undernutrition and malnutrition but is sometimes used in the sense of undernutrition only.

Undernutrition means inadequacy in the quantity of the diet, that is, in calorie intake. Continued over a long period, undernutrition results either in loss of normal body weight or reduction in physical activity, or both.

This definition is strictly appropriate to adults, not to children. For children, the consequences of low calorie intake are unsatisfactory growth and physical development and a reduction in the high degree of activity characteristic of healthy children.

Active Life

Malnutrition means inadequacy in the nutritional quality of the diet which if made good enables a person to lead a healthy, active life.

More precisely, it denotes inadequacy of one (particular) or several essential nutrients. Serious shortages of nutrients may result in clinical signs of specific deficiency diseases; minor degrees of deficiency contribute to poor general health (subclinical malnutrition).

Studying the results from the different countries I have reached the conclusion that at a very conservative estimate 20 per cent of the people in the less developed areas are undernourished.

The adverse effects on health of such undernutrition cannot be emphasized too strongly. Observations show that undernutrition may change the whole manner of life of people and is responsible for loss of body weight, insufficient physical effort and increased morbidity, and in its most serious degree may lead to death from starvation.

Thus, the facts that between 1,000 to 1,500 million people in the underdeveloped areas are either hungry or malnourished and that the population is growing at over 2 per cent per annum stress the need for immediately increasing food production. As a spur to this action and in order that nations may have a measure of the task that confronts them FAO has formulated nutritional goals of two types.

First Step

The short-term goals are but a first step looking as far ahead as the years 1980 in what must be a continuous effort to achieve an improvement in health through better nutrition.

The long-term goals do not provide any final answer either to the problem of hunger or malnutrition but give some idea of the scope for improvement in diet as the problem of poverty and scarcity becomes less acute. They are relevant for planning purposes, looking as far ahead as the year 2000.

The food basket available today in the less developed countries is hardly four-fifths of the diet represented by the short-term goal. The deficit is particularly large in protective foods whose availability per person is only three-fourths of what is nutritionally desirable under the short-term goal of nutrition.

If in addition to providing for the needs of the growing population we are also to remove hunger and attempt a modest improvement in the quality of diet to meet the needs of the vulnerable groups the total food supplies of the underdeveloped countries would have to be increased by over 89 per cent by the year 1980.

The attainment of the short-term and long-term goals of nutrition pre-supposes that the additional supplies of protective foods and in particular animal products would be administered to the needy. Such feeding programs have been successfully undertaken in the developed countries through the school clinics and the hospitals. Even in the developed countries, excellent work has been done by UNICEF and other organizations in distributing skimmed milk powder to pre-school children and to other vulnerable groups.

Mike Won Election; Dief the Campaign

By PETER C. NEWMAN

PRINCE ALBERT — There can be no doubt about it: the Liberals won the election but John Diefenbaker won the campaign.

He fought against odds that even in retrospect, look impossible. Only two months ago it seemed preposterous to suggest that this elecion would be anything more than a political obituary for that stubborn old politician from Prince Albert.

But he proclaimed his fifth "appointment with destiny," and he almost met it.

His failure to pioneer any dynamic new solution to Canada's problems, mattered little to Canadian electors.

His appeal rang true, and that was what counted.

There was little logic or structure in his speeches, but he was angry with what had been happening in Ottawa under the Pearson administration, and this, it turns out, was also the prevailing mood of the nation.

In his campaign John Diefenbaker took the risk of exposing his illusions to the test of reality. He fought on a platform which advocates the "One Canada" concept of Confederation which according to all the experts is impractical, obsolete and dangerous. But five of Canada's 10 provinces accepted it to the extent that they elected only two Liberals between them. And even Quebec did not wholly reject the Diefenbaker approach.

He stood as the champion of a way of life that was supposed to have disappeared in the affluent 60s. Yet the pioneer, Protestant ethic still seems to have a powerful hold in this country, and it rebelled against the Liberal government's cavalier treatment of the scandals.

Rural Appeal

John Diefenbaker directed his message to the rural, elderly and economically underprivileged sectors of the voting public. Obviously this appeal achieved considerable resonance with a wider audience.

All through his campaign, Diefenbaker stressed that "the Pearson brand of Liberalism" was not "in the great tradition of Laurier, Mackenzie King and St. Laurent." This attempt to implant a seed of doubt into the thinking of partisan Liberals was at least partially successful. At the same time, Diefenbaker was claiming that under the Pearson administration, a wedge had been driven between the government and the people.

It was this last appeal which probably did the most damage to the Liberal cause. The Pearson administration in fact was not a people's government but a regime of well-meaning technocrats. The voters sensed this alienation, interpreted it as arrogance, and opted against it.

John Diefenbaker's triumph remains only a half victory, because he is still far removed from any return to power. But he has gained at least two momentous personal achievements. He has vindicated himself with the Canadian people, and he has once again established his control over the Conservative party.

As always, John Diefenbaker remains a triumphant assortment of paradoxes. He is the only prime minister in Canadian history who never was granted the magic stamp of legitimacy by the nation's political and economic "establishments." While in office, he shocked the fastidious and amused the detached.

But on the hustings, he remains the champion. And the roots of political power in this country still lie close to the ground.

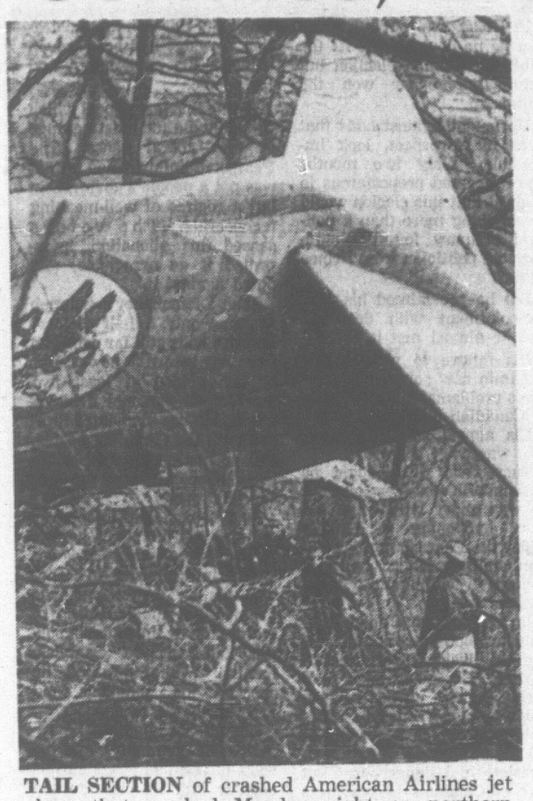
U.S. Jet Rams Hill 58 Killed, 4 Survive



TAIL SECTION of crashed American Airlines jet plane that crashed Monday night on northern Kentucky hillside is inspected by officials as study begins into cause of crash. Plane was en route from New York to Cincinnati. (AP Wirephoto.)

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP)—A jet airliner within landing sight of the runway crashed and exploded during a thunderstorm Monday night, killing 58 of the 62 persons aboard.

Five persons were thrown clear of the exploding wreckage. One died in hospital. Four lived, but one is in critical condition.

The American Airlines 727 from New York City smacked near the top of a 300 - foot wooded hillside a mile and a half from Cincinnati airport.

The crash was the third major air disaster in the world in less than a week. Last Wednesday an Argentine Air Force C-54 crashed near Costa Rica killing 68 and a French military DC-3 went down in French Somaliland killing 30.

In Monday night's disaster, the wreckage flashed flames into the sky for hours. Workers, certain no one lived in the melted metal, waited for fires to subside before searching for bodies.

The plane was barely visible in a downpour, with flashes of lightning, said Mrs. Ralph Sprague, who lives nearby. "The runway is just over the top of the hill," she said, "and the plane banked like it was heading for it, but it was very low and dropping fast.

"I knew it was going into that hill and I started screaming before it hit."

Mr. Gillis, a professor at Boston University, had his name struck from the voter's list on the grounds he was not a resident. He claims he maintains a summer home in the riding.

FINAL APPROVAL DUE MONDAY IN OAK BAY

Fluoridation Bylaw Readied

Oak Bay council is expected to give final reading on Monday to a bylaw which will put a fluoridation referendum before voters Dec. 11.

Council gave first readings to the bylaw May 25 when it passed unanimously.

Votes on fluoridation of water supplies have been held in 72 B.C. communities since 1954.

And 25 have said "yes." A 60 per cent vote in favor is needed to pass the measure.

1959 VOTE

Fluoridation was a municipal election issue in Greater Victoria in 1959 when 42.3 per cent of Oak Bay ratepayers voted in favor.

It was favored by 38.4 per cent of voters in Esquimalt; 36.9 in the city, and 35.4 per cent in Saanich.

A favorable vote would add one part fluoride to every million parts water in the municipality's supply.

Cost to install fluoridation equipment is estimated at $10,000 for two units and maintenance will cost $4,000 per year.

The Canadian Dental Association's 1965 report reveals 21 per cent of Canadians are drinking fluoridated water as compared with 32 per cent in the U.S.

Island communities with fluoridated water supplies include North Cowichan, Ucluelet, Campbell River and Lake Cowichan.

Smith Hints Displeasure As Official Visits U.K.

By MILTON MARMOR

LONDON (AP) — Sir Hugh Beadle, chief justice of Rhodesia, arrived today for talks with the British government on his country's constitutional crisis in apparent defiance of Prime Minister Ian Smith's government.

Beadle is the chairman-designate of a proposed royal commission to chart a passage for Rhodesian independence agreeable to the British and Rhodesian governments.

However, Smith has contended that Prime Minister Wilson's terms for the commission has slammed the door on its existence.

Smith has been quoted in Salisbury news dispatches as saying his government was highly displeased by Beadle's flight to London. He called Beadle's trip a private one.

Beadle apologized to reporters at London Airport for being unable to say anything about his journey..

VISIT FOLLOWS LETTER

Beadle's visit followed Smith's letter to Wilson contending that the British government's position seemed irreconcilable with the minority white-ruled colony's demands for full independence.

Wilson countered by offering to meet Smith for a third time in a month—this time in Malta —in a further attempt to solve the issue. At the same time Wilson sent a message inviting Beadle to London.

Beadle's coming to Britain was seen as a sign that the Rhodesian administration is far from united over Smith's frequent threats to grab independence for Rhodesia without British approval.

A unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) by the Rhodesian government would mean that the country's small white minority would keep its present dominant position.

Wilson has warned Smith that such a move would unite most of world opinion against Rhodesia and might bring on an inflammatory situation. There are 220,000 whites in Rhodesia and 4,000,000 Negroes.

Negro leaders want the country organized on a "one man one vote" basis.

Dentures or 'Bridges' Must Be Cleaned Like Fine Jewelry

Modern dentures are expensive —and like precious jewelry they may be damaged easily.

Because they are harder to clean and easier to damage, dentures and "bridges" must be cleaned with painstaking care. Do not risk hard brushing with abrasive pastes and powders. The safe—the more effective way —is the KLEENITE soaking method many dentists are showing patients. Triple action KLEENITE — solvent, detergent, oxidizing—reaches into "food traps" and crevices where brushing cannot. It removes fermented food, cause of bad breath—removes stain and discoloration.

For maximum results and utmost safety, immerse dentures for a few minutes in KLEENITE solution, then brush once over lightly. That is all. The difference in their life-like appearance will astound you.

Juror Relieved, Trial Continues With 11 on Panel

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The assizes court trial of a man accused of rape continued Monday with a jury of only 11 members.

The 12th member, Adolphe Streckenbach, was relieved of duty when it was discovered he could not hear witnesses because of a hearing impediment —and that he could hardly speak or understand English.

Mr. Streckenbach said his hearing problem was a sudden thing and had begun several days before the trial.

"It's just one of those things that happens," said the chief bailiff.

There is a provision in Canadian law which permits a trial to continue with 11 jurors if written consent of the crown is obtained.

Crown counsel D. F. McNeill said he had never seen an 11 man jury before.

"And I've been in this business for 35 years," he said.

The man accused of rape, Antol Loos, was later acquitted by the 11-man jury.

The Liberals had predicted they would boost their holdings in Quebec from 47 to 60 seats. They won 55.

They came out of the election in Ontario with the same they hed begun with, 51.

Only the big cities gave the Liberals the kind of support they sought. Montreal elected Liberals in 20 of its 21 ridings, a duplicate of 1963; Toronto 14 out of 18, a drop of two, and Vancouver four out of six, repeating 1963.

On the Prairies the government party ran into a stone wall, winning only one of 48 seats. They took three of them two years ago.

The voting turnout was about 73 per cent of the 10,225,000 eligibles, well below the 79.6 per cent of 1963 and the record 79.8 per cent of 1962.

Canada now has had five elections since 1957 when the Conservatives took office on a minority win. In 1958 the Conservatives won a record majority, slumped back to a minority in 1962 and lost to a Liberal minority in 1963.

It cost the taxpayers $13,500,000 to finance the latest election, it has been officially estimated.

The Liberals were shut out in three provinces — Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Only in Newfoundland did the Liberals really shine, with the staunch backing of Liberal Premier Joey Smallwood. They recaptured all seven seats on the island province, killing a comeback bid by former Conservative Solicitor-General William J. Browne.

But the Conservatives had the backing of Tory Premiers Walter Shaw in Prince Edward Island, and Robert Stanfield in Nova Scotia.

They gained all four seats on the island, winning two from the Liberals and knocking out MacNaught in one of them. In Nova Scotia the Conservatives picked up four seats.

While Pearson's chances in the election were hurt by campaign charges of bribery and impropriety in his administration, Diefenbaker's were improved by a reunion in his party and the return to the fold of several cabinet ministers who quit during his 1963 regime over the issue of whether Canadian missiles should be armed with U.S.-made nuclear warheads.

While Pearson lost ministers, former Tory cabinet members were returned.

Four former Conservative ministers came back — former citizenship minister Richard Bell, in Ottawa area Carleton; trade minister George Hees in Ontario's Northumberland, and justice minister Davie Fulton in the B.C. riding of Kamloops, and forestry minister Martial Asselin in Quebec's Charlevoix.

Both Hees and Fulton are top contenders for the Tory leadership when Diefenbaker steps down, a step that may have been hastened by tonight's results.

'Let Pundits Enjoy Themselves'

Asked about this, Diefenbaker replied with a smile that his retirement had been forecast as far back as 1929.

"I allow the pundits and prophets to enjoy themselves while I continue to serve the people," said Diefenbaker with a smile.

The NDP had one major defeat. Its bright light in Quebec, French-Canadian leader Robert Cliche, was defeated.

"I have been beaten by the Liberal machine," said Cliche, who said he would continue working for the NDP and would take another chance in the next election.

Other colorful losers included a former Liberal cabinet minister and a one-time Social Crediter, both going down in Quebec.

Yvon Dupuis, former minister without portfolio fired from the cabinet by Pearson after being charged with influence peddling, was defeated.

Guy Marcoux, who wrote the famous pamphlet dubbed "The Affair of the Six" charging six Social Crediters accepted bribes to support the previous minority government, was also turned down by the voters.

Three Quebec newcomers to Liberal ranks were elected, surprising almost no one. Jean Marchand, 47, former president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions; newspaperman Gerard Pelletier, 46, and law professor Pierre Elliott Trudeau, 45, had been hailed as "new look" Liberals in the province and potential cabinet material.

Robert Winters, Liberal works minister prior to his defeat in Nova Scotia in the 1957 election, won easily in the York West seat vacated by Liberal Red Kelly, the hockey star. He turned back George Hogan, prominent Conservative organizer.

Several former cabinet ministers were defeated, including Howard Green who was the Conservative external affairs minister when the Diefenbaker government fell.

BUT PARTIES DIVIDED ON POLICIES

Leaders See Long Life for Minority Regime

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — For the fourth time in eight years, Canada faces the prospect of minority government.

Nobody here is firmly predicting how long it will last, or how well it will work this time.

Minority party leaders T. C. Douglas of the New Democratic Party and Robert Thompson of the Social Credit say it could last and work well. But in their post-election comments Monday they were deeply divided on the sort of policies they would support.

Prime Minister Pearson, who may command 129 or so seats in the 265-seat House, declined any prediction beyond noting he is still prime minister and that the Liberal government intends to carry on.

Opposition Leader Diefenbaker, with about 100 supporters, gave every indication of keeping up his drive to regain the office of prime minister, in line with his stated ambition of becoming the third Canadian prime minister to return to the office after a defeat.

The other two were Conservative Sir John A. Macdonald, the country's first prime minister, and W. L. Mackenzie King, long-time Liberal prime minister.

STARTED IN MINORITY

Mr. Diefenbaker's Conservatives took office as a minority government in 1957 and then won a sweeping victory in 1958. They fell short of a majority in 1962 and then defeat in the Commons on a confidence issue involving nuclear arms forced another election in 1963.

That vote returned Mr. Pearson's Liberals as a minority. On Monday the country rebuffed his bid for a majority.

Governments won support of less than a clear majority in four earlier elections, and carried on—for a time.

In 1921, King's Liberals won 117 seats in a 235-seat House, with 50 Conservatives, 65 Progressives, and three Labor members in opposition. This was the first time third parties as such won seats in a Canadian general election.

Mr. King was able to control the House with opposition support. In 1925, the Liberals won only 101 seats in a 245-seat House. But Mr. King retained office for nine months, stickhandling his way through an opposition of 116 Conservatives, 24 Progressives and four others.

SOUGHT DISSOLUTION

When he appeared likely to meet defeat in the House, he sought an election but dissolution was refused by Governor-General Byng. Conservative Arthur Meighen was called on to form a government and his ministry fell in three months. Mr. King had his election.

In 1926 the Liberals won only 118 of the 245 seats, but the support of 10 Liberal-Progressives enabled them to carry on.

Again, in 1945, the Liberals won only 118 of the 245 seats. But before Parliament met, enough independent Liberals—many of whom had defeated official Liberal candidates—joined the Liberal caucus to preserve the government.

Now NDP Leader Douglas, heading a 21-man group, has the firmest grip on the balance of Parliament in the new Commons. On crucial issues his party could give the government a clear win over other opposition forces.

But Mr. Diefenbaker made it plain Monday night that he believes it would be improper for the Pearson government to seek a new general election without advising the Governor-General first to call on the Conservatives to form a ministry.

WOULD NEED HELP

A Conservative administration in the newly-elected Commons would need the support of all other groups now in opposition to have a working majority — an even more difficult arrangement to maintain than a tacit or actual Liberal-NDP alliance.

The widest split among the smaller parties appears to be between the Social Credit and the NDP.

Mr. Thompson, whose party elected five members, said the election result clearly was no mandate for the Liberals to introduce compulsory medical care insurance.

Mr. Douglas, however, saw the increase in popular support for his party as clear evidence the public wants such insurance, and he said his group will abide no watering down of the universal principle.

AUSSIES IN ACTION

Cong Battalion 'Annihilated'

SAIGON (Reuters) — A combined U.S. and Australian force virtually annihilated a Viet Cong main - force battalion near Bien Hoa Monday in one of the most savage battles of the Viet Nam war, it was announced today.

In a bloody encounter in dense jungle some 30 miles northeast of Saigon, U.S. and Australian troops killed an estimated 391 guerrillas, a U.S. spokesman said.

U.S. losses were officially described as "moderate," but a reliable source said they were the heaviest suffered by the Americans in a single engagement since the marine victory over a Viet Cong regiment south of Chu Lai last August, which cost more than 230 U.S. dead and wounded.

A U.S. military spokesman said about half the Viet Cong losses were attributed to artillery, which poured more than 900 shells on the guerrillas 30 miles northeast of Saigon.

American fighter bombers also pounded the Viet Cong troops, flying 35 sorties.

South Vietnamese government troops reported they killed 25 Viet Cong in an action 80 miles south of Saigon.

Communist groundfire brought down a U.S. Army helicopter, and one man was killed.

AGENA FAULT TRACED TO ENGINE

CAPE KENNEDY (UPI) —The failure of the Agena rendezvous rocket that broke up and ruined the Gemini 6 space chase mission Oct. 25 has been blamed on engine changes that apparently caused a backfire - like explosion in space.

The air force reported Monday that the apparent trouble slipped by undetected in ground tests. A flight tets for the modified Agena rocket was skipped to save money and because of the 95 per cent success record of standard Agenas.

In a joint statement with the federal space agency, an air force flight safety review board said the system used to start the Agena engine will probably have to be reworked before the rocket can be used as a Gemini target.

Plan To Bilk Woman Investor Told At Trial

QUEBEC (CP) — A man testified today at the fraud trial of Moise Darabaner that he and Darabaner formed a plan to bilk a woman investment dealer.

Gaston Constantin, who called Darabaner "my boss," and is charged in the same scheme, testified there was joy in the offices of Champlain Mortgage Loan when he brought in $45,000 given him by Rachel Smiley.

"Now we can breathe a bit," he quoted Darabaner as saying.

Constantin's testimony was given in a courtroom cleared of all spectators except reporters. The Crown said he would have trouble speaking before the packed gallery and Judge Cyrille Potvin granted its request.

Constantin said Miss Smiley, president of Junior Holdings of Quebec City, gave him the money as a payment for a promised Quebec government contract to manufacture sidewalk edging.

To persuade her that the loan company could get her the contract, Darabaner and Constantin prepared letters with a forged signature of Public Works Minister Rene St. Pierre, the witness said.

"I was at the bank with her (Miss Smiley) to pick up the . . . $45,000 and it was a great moment of joy in the office when I arrived with the money. Darabaner said that we could breathe again and pay the company's creditors."

Plaque Marks Peace Between Canada, U.S.

DOUGLAS, B.C. (CP) — About 300 Canadians and Americans attended a ceremony Sunday for the installation at this border crossing of a plaque commemorating the Treaty of Ghent.

The event was sponsored by the International Peace Arch Program Association, and included speeches by American and Canadian officials, and the exchange of flags.

The Treaty of Ghent, signed in 1815, ended the war of 1812 between Britain and the United States. Much of the war was fought in Canada, but it extended to Washington, D.C., when the president's mansion was burned by British troops.

After 100 years of peace along the border, the plaque was erected here on a cedar post. Later, the Peace Arch was built nearby.

The plaque was taken down in 1952 when a customs building was demolished. It is now installed on a granite base near its original site.

BUSINESS VIEWS

B.C. Still Leading in Retail Sales

By JIM HUME
Business Editor

British Columbia continues to lead the rest of Canada in retail sales increases.

The latest Maclean-Hunter survey shows sales for the province up 8.3 per cent with Ontario following with 7.1 per cent.

Hume

Other areas show increases, but way below the leaders.

The Atlantic provinces and Quebec are tied with 5.9 per cent increases, Saskatchewan is next with 4.6 (those wheat sales really help) Alberta a surprising last but one spot with 3.6, and Manitoba trailing with increases of 2.6 per cent.

★ ★ ★

What are people spending their money on?

Food, cars, clothes and furniture, that's what, with cars showing less cash volume but the greatest percentage increase.

Grocery and combination stores have racked up $2.5 billion in sales so far this year, an increase of 6.1 per cent over last year.

Motor-vehicle dealers have hit the $2.2 billion mark, an increase of 9.2 per cent, and department stores $935 million, an increase of 4.8 per cent.

As car be expected increased spending means that more people have money to lay on the line for the things they need.

In August only 2.8 per cent of the total work force of 7,490,000 was unemployed, the lowest percentage figure since 1951.

But in 1951 when 2.4 per cent of the work force couldn't find a job the total labor force in Canada was only 5,223,000.

★ ★ ★

As the jobs have increased so has the per capita personal income with Ontario still ahead with a per capita income of $2,228 followed closely by B.C. with $2,188.

Next door, neighbor Alberta holds down fifth spot on the per capita wage table with $1,871. Prince Edward Island is unenviably in bottom spot reporting an annual per capita income of $1,306.

Personal income of Canadians for the year is estimated at $37.5 billion with an average per capita income across the 10 provinces and the Northwest Territories of $1,917 compared with an average income of $1,821 last year.

But with every story there are two sides, with every boom a sad series of busts. This year is no exception, in fact it reports a record number of businesses going to the wall in spite of record high incomes and record high spending.

★ ★ ★

August was the bad month, the worst since February, 1960, for bankruptcy.

The figures serve ample warning that even with the economy booming, reaching too far for too much can prove disastrous.

In August, 178 business failures were recorded leaving $28 million in liabilities. In 1964 the same month produced almost as many bankruptcies — 167 — but with less than half the liabilities, $13.3 million.

While many of the failures can be attributed to straight business incompetence and others, according to the attorney-general of Quebec to less honorable reasons, there is in the great mass of statistics a note of warning to all producers and retailers.

★ ★ ★

The major appliance and radio and music departments of stores sound the warning most clearly.

In the first six months of this year major appliance sales increased 1.3 per cent. During the same period stock increased 3.9 per cent. In radio and music departments sales increased what at first appears a healthy 12.3 per cent until it is noted that stock increased by 19 per cent.

In other words, though wages and buying are on the increase purchasing is not keeping pace with production.

Taken alone the figures may not be too significant.

Taken in the context of recent warnings by industrial and political leaders they sound yet another warning bell that while booms are fine they must be controlled, for inflation is a constant companion.

A similar program will follow on the south block of 72 claims.

Dr. Harold Sigel has been appointed consulting engineer for the development program.

Croydon has $375,000 in the treasury at present, $330,000 in cash and $75,000 in investments.

Unexpected Opposition Holds Grits

By STAN McDOWELL
Times Quebec Bureau

QUEBEC — Quebec swung lazily toward the Liberals Monday. The swing was just strong enough to let the Liberals take the easy pickings from the divided Social Credit movement and to pick off a pair of the most loosely-held Conservative ridings.

But the Liberal swing ran up against an unexpected increase in the Conservative vote—which enabled the PCs to gain more from the Liberals than they lost to them—and stronger resistance from Real Caouette's Ralliement des Creditistes than had been expected.

Despite the vigorous campaigning of its Quebec leader, Robert Cliche, the New Democratic Party remained scoreless in the province, although it did slightly increase its percentage of the popular vote.

Although the recent scandals undoubtedly helped the Conservatives increase their share of the vote at the expense of the Liberals, two of the Conservative victories over the Liberals, Gaspe and Argenteuil-Two Mountains, were seen mainly as reflecting local issues. In Gaspe, Conservative Russel Keays had campaigned hard on the theme that the area had been neglected by the government and promised to work for a railway from Matane to St. Anne des Monts. In both Gaspe and Argenteuil the current difficulties of Quebec farmers had aroused some resentment against the party in power.

Tory Profits by Split Vote

The third Conservative win over the Liberals was St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, where Yvon Dupuis, former Liberal minister without portfolio, was running as an independent Liberal and was opposed by an official Liberal candidate.

Mr. Dupuis was asked to resign from the cabinet after he was charged with influence-peddling.

Although Mr. Dupuis campaigned vigorously and had looked like a winner in the riding which had been Liberal since Confederation, he ran second to Conservative Paul Beaulieu who profited by the split Liberal vote.

Conservatives did not suffer as much as expected from Mr. Diefenbaker's unfavorable image in Quebec. But they did lose the two ridings that had been held by Conservatives who left the party in protest against Mr. Diefenbaker's flag policy.

In Three Rivers, riding of Leon Balcer who left the party on the grounds that there was no place for a French-Canadian in Mr. Diefenbaker's party, an independent, J. A. Mongrain defeated lacklustre Conservative and Liberal candidates.

In Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, which had been represented by Remi Paul who crossed the floor during the flag debate to sit as an independent, the winner was Liberal Antonio Yanakis.

Although Real Caouette saw his strength cut in two—in comparison with 1963—he showed that his brand of Social Credit was the only one that would sell in Quebec.

The four former Socreds who remained loyal to Robert Thompson, and Dr. Guy Marcoux who had left Mr. Caouette to sit as an independent Socred, were all thoroughly trounced. Two of them, in Lac St. Jean and Portneuf, were defeated by Caouette Creditistes.

The core of the remaining Creditiste strength was among the loyal Caouette disciples who were not involved, in 1963, with the "affair of the six." However, one of the "six" who signed a declaration of support for the Liberals in 1963, kept his seat. This was Raymond Langlois in Megantic, one of the most diligent MPs in the movement.

The two former Socreds who defected to the Conservatives—they were led into the party by Leon Balcer before he left it himself—were both beaten by Liberals.

All Liberal cabinet ministers from the province were easily elected.

Fiery Campaigner Has Tough Fight

The party's three prestigious new recruits, Jean Marchand, Pierre Elliot Trudeau and Gerard Pelletier, also won their ridings. Law professor Trudeau and journalist Pelletier both won comfortably, but for Mr. Marchand, a former labor leader and the most fiery campaigner of the three, it was a race down to the wire against Creditiste Lucien Plourde in Quebec West.

The Liberal gains can by no means be interpreted as a declaration of enthusiastic support for the party in Quebec. Most Quebec ridings are traditionally Liberal and some of Grit wins were in ridings which were simply returning to their traditional voting habits. In some of these ridings the Liberals had the only well-co-ordinated organization.

Most observers are inclined to feel that at least some of the Creditistes' success in holding the seats they did, especially in the more isolated northern ridings, was due to the fear of conscription raised by Real Caouette. Conscription is an old bogey in Quebec and Mr. Caouette hit hard on the prediction that a Liberal government would send conscripts to Viet Nam.

For the Liberals there is a bright note, at least for the long run, in the opinion of many observers here that the election has now purged the taint of scandal and that, with its new and highly-respected recruits, the party can now begin to rebuild its prestige.

For the Conservatives, although as far as seats are concerned their position is little changed from 1963, there was the demonstration that the party retains a solid, if small, base of strength in Quebec.

Once again the NDP must be satisfied with a small increase in its popular vote.

As for Real Caouette, he is angrily denouncing the newspapers for opposing him, as he did in 1963, and, as in 1963 when he also lost seats, he is saying "wait until next time."

Conservatives Cut Deeply Into Maritimes Liberals

By IAN DONALDSON

HALIFAX (CP)—Voters in the Atlantic provinces Monday virtually reversed the Liberal pre-election majority in regional representation in the House of Commons.

Picking up four seats in Nova Scotia and two in Prince Edward Island, the Progressive Conservatives won 19 of the area's 33 seats. The Liberals managed to retain the other 14.

This compared to a 20-13 Liberal edge in the last Parliament.

Liberals were all but obliterated in Nova Scotia, where their only winner was Labor Minister Allan MacEachen.

The Conservatives won the other 11 seats in the province, up from seven in 1963.

All four Prince Edward Island seats went to Conservatives who had split two-and-two with the Liberals in 1963.

NFLD., N.B. UNCHANGED

The situation remained unchanged in Newfoundland and New Brunswick. Liberals swept all seven Newfoundland seats and retained six in New Brunswick. Conservatives held the other four New Brunswick seats.

The other parties were hardly a factor in the election in the Atlantic provinces. All NDP, Social Credit, Creditiste and independent candidates except the NDP's Ed Johnston in Cape Breton South lost their deposits for failing to gain at least half the number of votes of winning candidates.

Three of the region's four cabinet ministers were re-elected. Besides Mr. MacEachen, Transport Minister Pickersgill won in Bonavista-Twillingate and Fisheries Minister Robichaud in Gloucester.

Defeated in the Conservative sweep of Prince Edward Island was Mines Minister J. Watson MacNaught in Prince.

LOST TO MINISTER

He was defeated handily by Rev. David MacDonald, a United Church minister.

Just prior to the election MacNaught failed to extend an invitation to the P.E.I. legislature to the official sod-turning ceremonies which marked the beginning of the causeway connecting the province with the mainland. Observers felt this could have helped turn the vote against the Liberal member.

Tightest battle in the Atlantic provinces was in Nova Scotia's Antigonish - Guysborough. Election night results there showed Conservative D. Hugh Gills victor by only 19 votes over incumbent Liberal John Stewart.

'YOU CAN'T BEAT DEMOCRACY'

TORONTO (CP)—Wrestler William Whipper Billy Watson was knocked out of the political ring Monday by a 165-pound Liberal, Steve Otto.

Mr. Watson, who added eight pounds to his 240-pound frame during the federal election campaign, had no complaints about the fight for the York East riding held by Mr. Otto since 1962.

The professional wrestler said he was licked fair and square. He lost by more than 3,000 votes.

"You can't beat democracy," he said.

TWO 'FALLS' in one day were suffered by Progressive Conservative candidate Felicity Cochrane in the riding of Toronto Parkdale. She slipped on wet steps while leaving a polling station early in the day and broke her leg. At night she listened to the sad news of her second fall, a victory by Liberal candidate Stanley Haidasz.

MUSICAL CHAIRS IN ONTARIO

By JOHN LeBLANC

TORONTO (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson's plea for majority government was just the signal for a political game of musical chairs in Ontario Monday.

When the shuffling was over, the only winner was the New Democratic Party. The Liberals and Progressive Conservatives did not come up to their 1963 scores.

Ontario's voters took back from the government party more than they gave, confounding Liberal strategists who had looked confidently to fair pickings from the Commons' largest block of seats.

The Liberal total on the civilian vote — 51 seats — is about a dozen below the party's pre-election assessments and below the 52 won last time.

The NDP will have nine members, three better than in 1963 and two ahead of the count at dissolution. The Conservatives will have 25. They won 27 in 1963.

WIN AND LOSE

Everybody won and lost seats. Just how the shuffle panned out was not known fully early today pending a final result from the northern riding of Algoma West where the Liberal defender retained his seat by a slim margin.

The Liberals lost six and added five. The Conservatives lost four and gained three. The NDP gained three and lost one.

Liberal hopes foundered chiefly in eastern Ontario, where they lost three seats to the Conservatives; in the Toronto Metropolitan area, where they dropped two to the NDP; and in southwestern Ontario, where they gained a couple but failed to make expected major inroads. They broke even in the north, trading a pair with the NDP.

Prime Minister Pearson was re-elected comfortably in Algoma East over Conservative Joel Aldred and all eight Ontario cabinet members went back without trouble.

ADD WINTERS

The Liberals also added industrialist Robert Winters, a former works minister due for a cabinet post, who held hockey star Red Kelly's old Toronto-area riding of York West.

Prize catch for the Conservatives was Northumberland, where George Hees — who walked out of John Diefenbaker's cabinet in 1963 in a split over defence policy—got back into political life by squeaking past Liberal college professor Pauline Jewett, member of the last House.

The NDP brought back David Lewis, former deputy party leader in the Commons, who recaptured the York South seat he lost to a Liberal in 1963. The NDP also added Toronto Broadview and Nickel Belt in the north from the Liberals but failed to cut into the Conservatives.

The NDP also lost the huge northern riding of Port Arthur to the Liberals. It was left vulnerable by the retirement of Douglas Fisher, deputy NDP leader in the House who became a noted giant-killer when he knocked off Liberal strongman C. D. Howe in 1957.

The other Liberal gains were from the Conservatives in Elgin and Middlesex East.

The Conservatives, under leader John Diefenbaker who won an easy personal victory in Prince Albert, increased their Prairie strength by one over 1963 but lost a seat to Social Credit in British Columbia where other party standings remained unchanged.

Ten of Manitoba's 14 seats went to the Conservatives. The New Democratic Party increased its representation to three, a gain of one.

The sole Liberal elected on the Prairies was Veterans Affairs Minister Roger Teillet in St. Boniface.

As in 1963, all 17 seats in Saskatchewan were won by Conservatives.

HARRY HAYS UPSET

Major upset of the West was the defeat in Calgary South of Agriculture Minister Harry Hays by Calgary Alderman Ray Ballard, giving the Conservatives 15 of 17 seats in Alberta. The Conservatives had 14.

Social Credit retained two Alberta seats.

Mr. Ballard, 47, an accountant, held a 789 - vote margin over Mr. Hays, former Calgary mayor who won Calgary south in 1963.

Manitoba Conservatives lost Springfield to Ed Schreyer of the NDP but picked up Winnipeg South when L. R. (Bud) Sherman, a Winnipeg television news director, defeated Liberal Margaret Konantz who was up for re-election.

Former Conservative cabinet ministers Gordon Churchill and Walter Dinsdale were re-elected along with Stanley Knowles, veteran NDP member.

Successful Conservatives in Saskatchewan included former agriculture minister Alvin Hamilton in Qu'appelle and Dr. Lewis Brand in Saskatoon.

Hazen Argue, Liberal farm spokesman, failed to regain Assiniboia, the rural constituency he had represented from 1945 until 1963. Mr. Argue had been a CCF supporter until 1962.

SECOND IN NINE

NDP candidates finished second in nine Saskatchewan constituencies and Liberals were runners-up in eight. This compares with 12 second-place finishes by the Liberals and five by NDP in 1963.

Social Credit retained its two Alberta seats, Mr. Thompson in Red Deer and H. A. Olson in Medicine Hat.

Conservative winners in Alberta included Douglas Harkness in Calgary North, a former Diefenbaker cabinet minister who resigned from the government in 1963 in a dispute over nuclear policy.

Jack Bigg, Conservative member for Athabaska, had no problem disposing of Dave Hunter, Alberta Liberal leader who resigned to run federally after two unsuccessful attempts to get a provincial seat.

American Stations Give Vote

VANCOUVER (CP)—American television gave British Columbians their first indication of how Canada's general election was going Monday — an hour before B.C. polls closed.

Two powerful Seattle television stations, KING and KOMO —both easily picked up in the heavily populated lower mainland area of B.C.—referred to the Canadian election on the regular 6 p.m. newscasts.

KOMO gave a rundown on how parties were faring in eastern provinces where polls were already closed, citing Progressive Conservative gains from the Liberals in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia.

KING TV made no mention of election returns, but switched to a Toronto commentator who gave a rundown on the parties, the issues, and what the election could mean to the United States.

KVOS TV, whose powerful transmitter is just across the U.S. border in Bellingham and which handles many commercials from Canadian advertisers, made no mention of the election before close of the polls in B.C.

'Increase Baby Bonus For Support'

ROUYN, Que. (CP) — Disappointed and hoarse, Real Caouette said Monday night his Ralliement des Creditistes will support a Liberal government if it agrees to peg family allowances to the cost of living.

The northwestern Quebec auto dealer heads a party whose numbers in the next House of Commons have been cut to nine from the 13 it had at dissolution.

A minority government will have his group's support if it accepts Creditiste - promoted measures, he told some 10 party workers at his headquarters in Villeneuve riding.

QUEBEC NDP leader Robert Cliche was defeated in his bid to become the first New Democrat to win a seat in the French-Canadian province. He was defeated by a Liberal in the riding of Beauce.

THOMPSON SAYS ELECTION . . . . . . PEARSON'S GREATEST BLUNDER

'Protest Vote Went to Conservatives'

By STUART LAKE

RED DEER (CP) — Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson said Monday night his party failed to make big gains in the federal electio because "most of the protest vote went to the Conservatives."

The party, which had four members going into the election campaign, picked up only one seat in the Commons—the Okanagan - Revelstoke riding won by Howard Johnson. Party officials had hoped for as many as 15 seats.

Returning Social Credit members are Mr. Thompson (Red Deer), H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat), A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley), and Bert Leboe (Cariboo).

Mr. Thompson said a caucus will decide whether former Social Crediter Gerard Chapdelaine, who won the Quebec riding of Sherbrooke, will rejoin the party. He was the only one of five former Social Credit MPs from Quebec running as independents who held his seat.

While disappointed at the overall showing, Mr. Thompson was elated with his own victory in Red Deer. Several pollsters had predicted his defeat.

"They had spoken only to my enemies. They should have asked the people of Red Deer."

His margin of victory was more than 800 votes in excess of his 1963 win over Conservative Gordon Towers.

Mr. Thompson said the Monday voting was "a complete rejection of the Liberals," who campaigned for a majority government.

Calling the election was Prime Minister Pearson's "greatest blunder."

The voting could also be considered a repudiation by the people of the government's proposed compulsory medical care plan. The prime minister and other cabinet ministers had said a majority vote for the Liberals would be considered a go-ahead signal for medical care.

Mr. Thompson said Canadians won't be subjected to another federal election until 1969 "and certainly not until after centennial year."

'REFORMS ARE NEEDED'

Parliament should get down to work and forget "petty partisan politics." First some reforms were needed.

"The prime minister should stand up in his place and say that the government will not consider a defeat of any of its legislation as a vote of non-confidence," said Mr. Thompson.

The only exception would be a major money bill.

He ruled out any possibility of Social Credit members and the nine Creditistes voting as a block.

"They (the Creditistes) do not belong to the national party," he said.

Mr. Thompson goes to Edmonton today to make plans for the party's national conference, scheduled for the end of the month there.

He will talk with party officials in Toronto Wednesday and then spend the remainder of the week in Ottawa.

EASY WINNER in Red Deer was Social Credit leader Robert Thompson who was hoisted on the shoulders of supporters as he arrived at his party headquarters in Red Deer. (CP Wirephoto.)

HEADQUARTERS: GLOOM, HOPE, DISMAY

By JOYCE FAIRBAIRN
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — In Liberal national headquarters there was gloom and despondency.

Six blocks away the Tory camp was filled with cheer, some surprise and finally disappointment that they hadn't been able to make the minority win their own.

Now that election night is a well-organized Madison Avenue production, the national headquarters themselves are not heavily patronized by either public or press.

Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, who spends the final hours in Ottawa rather than his home riding of Algoma East, does drop in briefly to watch initial results.

But because of the limited capacity of the old house at 251 Cooper St., the bulk of the evening shifts to the Chateau Laurier Hotel, a stone's throw from Parliament Hill.

The prime minister, wearing a grey suit and a red carnation in his lapel, started off the evening in public in good spirits. He ended it the same way.

With his wife Maryon and daughter Patsy, plus a small circle of top Liberal officials, he watched the eastern results in a second-floor room at Cooper Street.

They were not encouraging, and the headquarters staff began to droop visibly as did the innumerable bouquets of red carnations which were scattered through the rooms.

National Liberal organizer Keith Davey, one of the chief advisers who had urged Pearson to go to the country, moved continuously and silently from his ground-floor office to the prime minister's room.

His pin-striped suit was rumpled, there was a pencil in his mouth and for a time he spoke to no one.

Outside his office there was a map of Canada and red and blue thumb tacks were dotted over it to indicate Liberal and Tory wins.

At 8:45 p.m., after the Liberals had been wiped out in the bellweather province of Prince Edward Island and almost routed in Nova Scotia, Davey shook his head

"We'll be very lucky to get the 140 seats for that majority," he said.

Liberal failure in the Maritimes was due to the "machine" of Tory Premier Robert Stanfield who pulled out the stops for Diefenbaker.

"That machine creamed us," said the former Toronto radio executive. "It was Mr. Stanfield's bid for the party leadership and it was successful."

Bill MacEachern, a former newspaperman who is the public relations stalwart at Liberal headquarters, thought the results were turning out a "mess."

The prime minister left for the Chateau waving and smiling and saying he was "still confident" for a majority win.

Over in Tory headquarters Davey's counterpart, Toronto lawyer Edwin Goodman, exhibited guarded optimism.

"If you gave me 5,000 votes or maybe 10,000 votes to scatter around we could win this election," he said. "We are just great in Quebec but we cracked in Southwestern Ontario."

Tory headquarters occupies three floors in an office building in downtown Ottawa. On one floor there was a huge chart of all the ridings in Canada.

On the next floor was the staff conclave where Goodman maintained steady telephone contact with Opposition Leader John Diefenbaker in a Tory blue room with blue furniture and blue drapes.

From time to time a cheer would seep out from behind that closed door. One hearty one went to the election of former Tory trade minister George Hees who is one of Goodman's personal political projects.

The diminutive lawyer was in a talkative mood as the results poured in.

"So far we've got MacNaught, Regenstreif and Gallup," he crowed over the defeat of the Liberal mines minister and the inaccurate predictions of national pollsters.

At another point he noted that Forestry Minister Maurice Sauve had won by "100 stinking votes—all we needed was 50 more people to finish him off."

Back in the Chateau the Pearsons were ordering sandwiches and coffee. When the coffee machine was plugged in it blew a fuse.

Pearson phoned his workers in Algoma East to say thank you.

"Someone has just lost $65,000 in trying to win a seat," he was reported as saying. The inference drawn was directed at television personality Joel Aldred who launched a high-powered and unsuccessful campaign against Pearson in the riding.

After the British Columbia results completed the list Pearson moved down to the ornate convention hall in the hotel.

To a cluster of supporters and the ever-present newsmen he delivered his formal statement in French and English with a weariness born of disappointment.

His final words were:

"It has been a long hard campaign."

"I think I'll go home to bed."

For the Liberals perhaps the most succinct comment came from Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp.

"What happened," he was asked.

"I don't know," he replied.

DEACHMAN REPEATS 'FREAK'

His Political Future Dims

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Conservative Howard Green's political future appeared dim today following his second consecutive defeat to Liberal Grant Deachman.

The former external affairs minister put up a tough battle as he and Deachman kept everyone in suspense until the final Vancouver-Quadra poll was reported. The result gave Deachman 12,534 and Green 12,279.

Green's only hope lay in the remote possibility of a heavy armed service vote or a recount. Both are regarded unlikely.

The veteran campaigner refused to admit defeat right to the end, and chose to talk about other facets of the election.

"The general result indicates the folly of having an election called at this time. The government is right back at about the same position it was before. Now there has to be some way found to make Parliament function.

"I don't think the Liberals and New Democrats will form a coalition. Mr. (T. C.) Douglas said he wouldn't do that," he added.

Green, 69, had been defeated in one of the biggest upsets of the 1963 election.

He won every election since 1935 until he met Deachman, and fell victim to a revolt against the Diefenbaker government, in which he had been works minister, and later, minister of external affairs.

Deachman, 52, a public relations man and professional fund-raiser, used his vocational talents to set up a tremendous political organization.

Green's team had considered the 1963 setback a "freak occurrence" and had been confident Green's popularity would win out Monday.

Manitoba Premier Duff Roblin had made a special trip to Vancouver to speak on Green's behalf.

Green was first elected to Parliament in 1935 in Vancouver-South, and switched to Vancouver-Quadra when it was formed in 1947. He won eight consecutive elections before 1963.

Grim Day For Accuser And Accused

QUEBEC (CP)—Both the accuser and the accused in the so-called scandal of the Social Credit sextet had a grim day Monday.

Dr. Guy Marcoux, who rocked the national campaign with a booklet containing vague allegations of attempted bribery and "shady" deals, ran a poor third in Quebec-Montmorency behind Liberal Ovide Laflamme and Creditiste Henry Borgia.

Formerly the right-hand man of Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson in the Commons, Dr. Marcoux charged in a booklet that a Social Credit organizer was offered $25,000 just after the 1963 election to round up five or six MPs who would agree to "sell themselves" to the minority Liberal group.

Six MPs and former MPs who signed a pledge to back the Liberals four days after the 1963 vote and retracted it a week later, vehemently denied they were bribed and said they would sue Dr. Marcoux for libel after this election. The provincial police investigated the allegations and found no evidence of a shady deal.

ONLY ONE SURVIVED

The six sought re-election as Creditistes Monday and five were beaten. Raymond Langlois, 29, a school teacher, was the sole survivor, winning in Megantic.

Gilbert Rondeau was defeated narrowly by Conservative Paul O. Trepanier, mayor of Granby, in Shefford.

The other four lost to Liberals. They are Gerard Perron (Beauce), Robert Beaule (Quebec East), Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester) and Lucien Plourde (Quebec West), beaten in a close race by former labor leader Jean Marchand.

Creditiste representation in the Commons was reduced to nine from 13 seats at dissolution. The seven Quebec MPs who remained loyal to Mr. Thompson after the 1963 party split and defected later were wiped out at the polls.

Voters in No Mood For Majority Plea

19 B.C. Members Returned As NDP Improves Record

By DENNIS ORCHARD
Canadian Press

A lot of British Columbia voters stayed home Monday, and those who did go to the polls hadn't changed their minds.

They sent back to Ottawa all 19 incumbent MPs who ran in this federal election. What little enthusiasm they mustered leaned left, to the New Democratic Party, and right, to Social Credit.

The voters were in no mood to help Liberals to a national majority. Turnouts were almost uniformly lower than in 1963. The NDP, apparently at Liberals' expense, piled up fat majorities, improving their records from 1963 in almost every case.

The province's new standing: NDP 9, Liberal 7, Progressive Conservative 3, Social Credit 3.

Social Credit made the only numerical improvement with a victory in Okanagan-Revelstoke by Salmon Arm high school teacher Howard Johnston, 37, a gain from the Conservatives. The riding was undefended by Stuart Fleming, who quit politics after three terms in the Commons.

LAST TO FIRST

Mr. Johnston's first crack at the game brought Social Credit from a last-place stand in 1963 to a 268-vote victory over runner-up John Gracey, a Conservative.

Davie Fulton, with the way opened by retirement of another Conservative incumbent, swept back into federal politics with a 4,000-vote majority in Kamloops. The margin was 1,500 votes short of his edge three years ago in his last federal campaign, but better than most observers expected following his interim venture as provincial leader of his party.

B.C.'s other fresh face in Parliament will be feminine. Grace MacInnis, 60, became the province's first woman MP with a smashing victory over youngish Liberal Jack Austin in Vancouver Kingsway.

She takes a unique Socialist heritage into the Commons as a daughter of CCF founder J. S. Woodsworth, widow of six-term MP Angus MacInnis, and a reputation as an effective party organizer in nine provinces.

RESULTS SWIFT

Within an hour of the 7 p.m. close of polls it was clear that B.C. would send back T. C. Douglas, NDP leader, and its two cabinet men, Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing and Immigration Minister Jack Nicholson.

Much later the tabulation spelled another defeat for Howard Green, long the unbeatable "Mr. Quadra" of the residential Vancouver Quadra riding. Mr. Green fell for the second time to Liberal Grant Deachman, although he chopped the 1963 margin from 1,404 votes to about 275.

The former Conservative external affairs minister said he would make no concession pending the official count and service vote, but servicemen last time went 346-168 in Mr. Deachman's favor.

LIBERALS LOST

Liberal margins were uniformly lower except for Mr. Nicholson, whose relaxed immigration policies apparently found favor with the large Chinese - Canadian population of Vancouver Centre.

Mr. Douglas won by 10,670 votes in Burnaby-Coquitlam, the NDP's Barry Mather by 11,989 in New Westminster, and veteran Harold Winch by 7,773 in Vancouver East, close to a personal record in his stronghold.

Biggest majority in the province again went to Liberal Jack Davis in Coast-Capilano, but his 13,584-vote advantage over the NDP's William Deverell was about 2,000 below 1963.

Four Women MPs Win Out of a Field of 37

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The number of women in the Commons was reduced from six to four in Monday's general election. Three were returned and one newcomer was added.

The New Democratic Party fielded 16 of the 37 women candidates but elected only one, Mrs. Grace MacInnis, 60, in Vancouver-Kingsway. She is the first women MP for British Columbia.

Mrs. MacInnis is the daughter of CCF founder J. S. Woodsworth, and widow of six-term MP Angus MacInnis. She took over the riding from Arnold Webster of the NDP who has retired.

The Liberals returned Mrs. Margaret Rideout in Westmorland in New Brunswick and Health Minister Judy LaMarsh in Niagara Falls.

MRS. WADDS WINS AGAIN

Mrs. Jean Wadds won Grenville-Dundas for the Conservatives for the fourth time.

In Northumberland, Liberal defender Pauline Jewett was defeated by George Hees, former Conservative cabinet minister.

Mrs. Margaret Konantz, also a Liberal member of the last House, lost Winnipeg South to Conservative L. R. (Bud) Sherman.

The sixth woman member of the 26th Parliament, Mrs. Elosie Jones of Saskatoon, did not run.

Four women were elected in the 1963 election. Mrs. Rideout and Mrs. Jones won their seats in byelections in 1964.

WIDOWS OF FORMER MPs

Mrs. MacInnis, Mrs. Wadds, and Mrs. Rideout are widows of former MPs. Mrs. MacInnis and Mrs. Wadds are also daughters of former members.

Miss Lamarsh defeated four other candidates including another woman, Conservative Mrs. Jean Douglas.

This was not the first win for Mrs. MacInnis. She was a member of the B.C. legislature from 1941 to 1945. Her husband, Angus MacInnis, who died last year, was an MP for six terms.

Mrs. Wadds is the widow of A. Clair Casselman, a former dean of the Commons, and daughter of Ontario's Lieutenant - Governor Earl Rowe. She was first elected in 1958 after the death of her first husband, and was re-elected in 1962 and 1963. She married Robert Wadds in 1964.

Mrs. Rideout, New Brunswick's first woman MP, won her seat in a 1964 byelection six months after the death of her husband, MP S. H. Rideout.

Perhaps the heroine in this general election was Mrs. Felicity Cochrane, defeated Conservative candidate in Toronto Parkdale.

She broke her leg in a fall down wet, slippery steps on a tour of polling stations. After her leg was put in a cast she insisted on returning to her headquarters in a wheelchair to thank her campaign workers. In 1958, Mrs. Cochrane was stricken with polio and regained the use of her legs after extensive therapy.

This year's 37 women candidates compared with 48 in 1953 and 43 in 1963. The last Parliament had the greatest number of women members at one time, with six.

The NDP nominated 16 women, Liberals and Progressive Conservatives eight each, Social Credit three, Communists one, and there was one Independent-Liberal.

SOCRED PULLS B.C.'s ONLY UPSET

SALMON ARM (CP) — Howard E. Johnston, who pulled British Columbia's only upset in the federal election, is an Okanagan native with a lifelong interest in Social Credit.

He won the Okanagan-Revelstoke riding from the Progressive Conservatives, a riding in which Social Credit ran a flat last in 1963.

Conservative's Stuart Fleming won in 1958 and retired from politics this year.

SERIOUS VIOLATIONS SAYS ALDRED

ESPANOLA, Ont. (CP) — Television personality Joel Aldred says there were "serious" election violtions in Algoma East where he was defeated Monday night by Prime Minister Pearson.

With 154 of 161 polls in, the final report Monday night, Mr. Aldred, the Conservative canndidate, had polled 5,575 votes to Mr. Pearson's 11,453.

"I believe there have been serious violations in this Algoma East election," Mr. Aldred said at his campaign headquarters in this community about 140 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie. He did not elaborate.

Mr. Aldred said he "would never concede defeat until everything is taken into account."

DIEFENBAKER GIGGLES AS POLLSTER WRIGGLES

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — Conservative Leader Diefenbaker watched the election results Monday on television here and got some chuckles from Peter Regenstrief.

Regenstrief, a poll-taker, was a CBC election-night commentator. He had predicted a Liberal majority.

Mr. Diefenbaker "hooted" at the Regenstrief appearance, a spokesman said, relishing the sight of the poll-taker explaining away his prediction.

All-Important Seat For Leadership Bid

COBOURG, Ont. (CP)—George Hees charmed the voters of Northumberland into sending him back to Ottawa Monday, giving him an all-important Commons seat from which to vault into any Conservative leadership race.

The 55-year-old former Conservative trade minister, who resigned his cabinet post in 1963 after a policy dispute with his leader John Diefenbaker, narrowly defeated Liberal Pauline Jewett by capturing a larger share of the farm vote in this mainly rural riding.

"I can hardly wait until Parliament opens again," he said. But he would not comment on the possibility of seeking the leadership of the Progressive Conservative party.

"I'm afraid I'm unable to answer a question that is hypothetical," he said. "Mr. Diefenbaker is leader and will remain so until he wishes to relinquish his post."

Mr. Hees represented Toronto Broadview in the Commons from 1950 to 1963. He became transport minister after the Conservatives gained power in 1957 and in 1960 was made minister of trade and commerce.

In the spring of 1964 he became president of the Montreal and Canadian stock exchanges, and seemed of a mind to sit out this campaign, as he did the one in 1963, until offered the Northumberland nomination.

FARM A SPRINGBOARD

The Hees family has had a farm near Cobourg for more than 50 years, and the suave Toronto millionaire had used it as a weekend retreat. With this claim to residence in the riding, he jumped at the chance to do battle with Miss Jewitt, a political scientist who won Northumberland from the Conservatives in 1963.

Knocking on doors in Cobourg, Northumberland's main urban area, and meeting the farmers on their land in a strenuous personal campaign helped him reduce the Liberal strength in Cobourg and hold rural Conservatives. His margin was 313 votes with 101 of 129 polls reporting.

'Will Regret' Choice of Party

MONTREAL (CP)—Charles Taylor, New Democrat beaten in Montreal Mount Royal by an old friend who joined the Liberals, said Monday Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the Liberal, "will regret very deeply" his choice of party.

"A man of the left in a party of the right is always sad," the McGill University political scientist said of his University of Montreal law professor conqueror. Both men had collaborated on the "small L liberal" magazine Cite Libre. (Free Community).

Agricultural Leaders' Bids Fail

EDMONTON (CP)—Two agriculture leaders who ran as New Democratic Party candidates failed to unseat Conservative members in Saskatchewan.

Alfred Gleave, former president of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union and National Farmers Union, was unsuccessful in Rosetown-Biggar.

Ed Nelson, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a former president of the Farmers Union of Alberta, ran in Wetaskiwin.

'Looking Forward to Doing Job'

KAMLOOPS (CP)—Davie Fulton, who won back the seat he held for 17 years, said Monday he looks forward to "doing my job by the Kamloops riding."

Mr. Fulton, who has been widely rumored as a possible successor to John Diefenbaker as leader of the Progressive Conservatives, quit federal politics in 1962 to become leader of the B.C. party.

He was defeated by Highways Minister P. A. Gaglardi in Kamloops in the last provincial election, in which no Conservatives were elected.

Asked whether he was glad to be back in federal politics Monday, he replied: "What do you think?"

Negro 'Wins' Despite Defeat

HAMILTON (CP)—Lincoln Alexander, who was 2,000 votes short of becoming the first Negro member of Parliament, said Monday night: "I feel that I've won something here, no matter what."

Mr. Alexander, Progressive Conservative candidate defeated by Liberal Joseph Macaluso in Hamilton West, said in conceding: "This has been a personal victory for me and mine and I don't think I have to elaborate on that statement."

When he went to Mr. Macaluso's headquarters and embraced the winner, he told the jubilant Liberal supporters: "Get your guns ready because we're coming back again."

Manning's Son Unsuccessful

EDMONTON (CP)—Preston Manning, 23-year-old son of Alberta Premier Ernest Manning, was unsuccessful as a Social Credit candidate in Edmonton East.

Making his first bid in politics, Mr. Manning was runner-up to Conservative William Skoreyko in a five-way contest.

Premier Manning has not lost an election since he ran for the first time in 1935 in a provincial election. He was 25 then.

BETWEEN CANADA-U.S.

It's Business as Usual

By ARCH MacKENZIE

WASHINGTON (CP)—The return of the Liberals as the largest party in the Canadian House of Commons in Monday's general election spells business as usual with the United States, it was assumed here.

A Liberal victory had been expected in government circles. There was, however, no official comment from the state department, in keeping with standard policy concerning political events in most friendly countries.

U.S. officials had given every sign of wanting to avoid involvement this time after being drawn into the 1963 campaign because of an ill-timed public statement on Canadian acquisition of nuclear arms.

No special problems between the two countries appear to have been held up pending the Canadian voting. The most long-standing negotiation concerns a new civil air agreement to give Canada a deeper penetration of the U.S. and little progress has been visible.

More basic is the continuing consultation on meshing balance-of-payments problems in each country. A special committee established for that purpose met here in July and the second of several meetings a year is scheduled for Ottawa Nov. 19.

Speed, TV Kill the Fun

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Election Night Just Isn't the Same

By PETE LOUDON

There they sat, huddled around television sets like chickens at feeding time.

And there was more clucking than crowing.

That was the scene at most Victoria and Esquimalt-Saanich campaign headquarters—the exceptions being two spots where there was no TV.

Television appears to have taken the fun out of election night get-togethers. Most people have found they can watch it just as comfortably at home.

The crowds were small at party headquarters, ranging from 20 to 75 at the largest gathering.

It was only a few years ago that it seemed half the town was either at the party parties or in the newspaper offices watching the figures growing longer on borrowed blackboards. Sometimes the festivities would last until dawn.

Even in the winner's camp things were dull Monday night.

At victorious Victoria candidate Dave Groos' place on Yates the TV finally broke down and it appeared for a moment people might have to furnish their own entertainment. But no—they packed it up.

Somebody finally turned down the big eye at George Chatterton's Esquimalt-Saanich campaign office and everybody joined in singing For He's a Jolly Good Fellow . . . but it wasn't like the good old days.

The results come in so fast nowadays that the hours of tension after polls close are gone. B.C. being on the tail end of things timewise, the die is cast in the first few minutes.

Once a reporter could travel to the eight campaign offices in the two local ridings and be in time to catch everyone while the glow of hope still shone. Now, by the time you've gone the circuit the also-rans have all but cancelled their lease.

★

At Liberal headquarters in Victoria the local victory was dampened by the fact, apparent by 7 p.m., that the party was going to have another minority government.

At Victoria Conservative headquarters, where John Diefenbaker glared down from a rear wall and festoons of balloons hung limply, the gathering of 20 was almost silent before an 11-inch TV screen.

There was about 20 people at Victoria NDP headquarters on Government Street too. The only visible smile was worn by Lloyd Brereton's campaign manager Neil Hindle. He had accepted a $2 bet with Liberal candidate Groos who maintained his party would win a majority.

At Victoria Socred headquarters in the old "Y" building about 50 people stared at two TVs. Only the candidate, Frank Hunter, appeared excited.

Esquimalt-Saanich Conservatives, aside from the one burst of song, also was less than jolly—except for candidate Chatterton and Mrs. Chatterton. Their victory was cooled by the Liberal win nationally.

★

At Esquimalt-Saanich NDP headquarters where a dozen people listened to radio, a couple of boys were stacking away campaign literature "for next year's election". Candidate Stephenson was disappointed at having lost but buoyed by his lead over the Liberals—a switch from 1963.

Esquimalt-Saanich Liberal headquarters contained some 30 party supporters listening with one ear to Prime Minister Pearson on television and to election returns on the radio with the other.

NDP candidate Stephenson joined him in this—"I know now, this is my life," he said. And Socred candidate candidate, Mrs. Vera Pipes, said she'd do the same.

But most voters who discussed the election's outcome were hopeful another election wouldn't be necessary for a long time to come. They just don't seem to be fun anymore.

'JOLLY GOOD FELLOW'

Nuzzled by his wife in hour of victory, Esquimalt-Saanich Tory candidate George Chatterton took time to phone the news to his children in Ottawa. His easy victory was generally anticipated even outside Tory ranks and reflects years of community service in Saanich where he served as reeve before entering federal field. Campaign workers sang For He's a Jolly Good Fellow, and losing candidates came to his headquarters to shake hands. Only three Tories were elected in B.C.'s 22 seats. (Halkett Photo.)

But You Promised! Said the Lady

The difficult we do immediately, the impossible takes longer.

At 7:02 p.m. Monday, two minutes after polls closed a woman phoned the Times newsroom to ask who won Esquimalt-Saanich.

Told that the count was barely under way, she objected. She said the Times promised to have results after 7.

Times staffers answered hundreds of calls continuously until midnight as they have done in other elections—but this time there was a difference.

In earlier years the callers would respond often with shouts, cheers or curses. This year they were more contained. Perhaps after so many elections people are past caring?

. . . AND STILL IN COMMAND

Long watch ends for former naval captain David Groos at party headquarters and crew breaks into applause. All evening he had nervously paced his quarterdeck, too tense to sit down.

Waite Won't Give Up; Awaits Service Vote

"BEAUTIFUL LADY with a lovely name" was the phrase Sir Wilfrid Laurier used in flattering Mrs. Agnes C[illegible] bell when she attended one of his early rallies in Victoria many years ago. So it was only natural she was still rooting for the Grits Monday night at party headquarters. She joined the party in 1913 to help defeat the McBride government two years later.

Groos Majority Cut to 1,000

By JOHN MIKA

All candidates in Victoria riding said they were happy with results of voting Monday night.

David Groos, Liberal candidate seeking re-election, topped the count but his majority was sufficiently cut that runner-up Conservative candidate Rev. Clifford Waite would not concede.

Mr. Groos wound up with 13,409 votes from the 288 polls. Mr. Waite took 12,401.

The Tory standard-bearer pinned his hopes on the breakdown of the servicemen's vote which will not be tabulated until Saturday.

But if it follows the pattern of the last elections, it will only increase Mr. Groos' lead. In 1963 the armed forces vote gave 1,076 votes to Mr. Groos, 252 to the Conservatives, 120 to the Social Credit, 57 to the NDP and 83 for independent-Liberal Foster Isherwood.

Social Credit candidate Frank Hunter (9,598 votes) took pleasure from the fact that he had substantially increased his party's vote and raised it from fourth to third place—and said he would seek the nomination again.

New Democratic Party candidate Lloyd Brereton (7,147 votes) said he was happy to see gains in the total vote for his party and took satisfaction from the fact that this time it would not lose its deposit for a change.

Even the bottom running Communists (375 votes) said they were happy. The candidate, W. S. E. Morrison, wasn't in Victoria because he returned to his West Vancouver home to vote but his manager Ernest Knott spoke for him.

TREND SET FROM FIRST

"It was a foregone conclusion," he said of Mr. Morrison's standing "but we are very happy with the national outcome because the NDP now holds the balance of power—our forecast was certainly better than the pollsters—and we think that's good for Canada."

The Victoria trend was set from the first posting of returns at 7:15 p.m. with 15 polls tallied showing 477 for Groos, 422 for Waite, 329 for Hunter, 211 for Brereton and 11 for Morrison.

By 9 p.m. Mr. Waite said he was delighted with "the loyalty from my supporters. Considering that I have been here only 2½ years, it is beyond my highest expectation.

"I am not conceding because the service vote could make all the difference."

Minutes later, Mr. Groos, having accepted congratulations as the apparent winner from Mr. Hunter, told supporters in his committee room that it was time to go home.

'CAN'T SAY I HAVE WON'

"We are ahead about 800 votes at the moment which, incidentally, is just about exactly where we were at this time in the last election," he said.

"I can't say I have won and I won't be able to say it until the last vote is counted.

"I can only say that I would rather be in my shoes than in those of any other candidate."

Commented Mr. Hunter:

"I feel, considering the results of the last election, we have reason to be pleased with the showing of the Social Credit League in Victoria.

"We were fourth then, with only about one-third the number of votes of the winner. This time there has been a tremendous advance with a new, and you might say uninitiated, candidate against seasoned veterans."

Asked if he would consider running again, Mr. Hunter said:

"Once having put my hand to the plough, if God gives me the strength, I would like to carry forward with this responsibility. I would be a candidate again, in fairness to the league and myself."

Mr. Brereton said he enjoyed the campaign "because it was a good and a clean campaign in Victoria. It is clear the NDP is gaining more support in each election here which is in line with the national trend.

"I would like to add that we've had very fair and expert reporting by the local newspapers."

WAITE

VOTERS PLUG HOSPITAL

Voters were a problem to a busy hospital staff at St. Joseph's Monday.

A poll had been set up in the basement cafeteria and the to-and-fro traffic was a constant irritation, according to one nurse.

Most of the voters were elderly people from nearby nursing homes. They trooped in through a first floor door and tied up the elevator all day.

Others came in private cars which parked in the ambulance emergency driveway—requiring constant supervision of drivers.

At Royal Jubilee Hospital several patients were upset by a Times report Monday that not one patient registered there cast a vote at the hospital. They thought this meant they weren't interested.

Many wanted to vote but were not in hospital when enumeration took place. The voting system robs the franchise from those who take sick after enumeration—unless they are taken from hospital to vote in their own neighborhood poll.

Why Rent?

Overheard in Victoria Liberal headquarters Monday night:

"I don't see any point in renting this place on a short-term basis.

"I think we ought to take out an 18-month lease."

CHATTERTON DOUBLES 1963 MAJORITY

'Grits Can Only Blame Themselves'

By ROGER STONEBANKS

The Liberals have only themselves to thank for more minority government.

That was the first comment from Progressive Conservative George Chatterton, who won his fourth election in four years Monday in Esquimalt-Saanich.

In doing so, he doubled his 1963 majority reaching 5,502 on the election night count. Official count takes place Nov. 17 and will include about 1,000 service votes. The service vote will be announced Saturday.

"There was no real reason to call this election," said Mr. Chatterton. "People are fed up with elections."

"And I'd hate to see another election as (Prime Minister) Pearson threatened, in the next 18 months or two years."

He declared himself "very gratified" with personal re-election and attributed it mainly to voter response "to my efforts to do a good job, to be conscientious, and I will continue this way."

He announced plans to return to his Ottawa home in about a week, with his wife Kitty going a little earlier. Three of their four children are there.

One measure he said he will press for is provision for persons to be able to vote in hospitals.

Noting about 1,000 Greater Victorians lost their vote Monday because they couldn't leave hospital for their home polls, he said a roving deputy returning officer could easily handle the situation.

There were no big scenes of jubilation at his campaign headquarters for the man almost everyone predicted would easily gain re-election.

Victory came shortly before 8:30 p.m. after he built up a commanding lead.

He led almost every poll as returns poured into the returning office at Cadboro Bay.

The first poll gave 42 votes to him and Liberal James Gorst, but the second and all subsequent polls kept him well in the lead.

One hour after polls closed, Mr. Chatterton was 1,000 votes ahead and in just over 15 minutes increased this to 2,000.

The only surprise of the evening was the strength shown by Len Stephenson of the New Democratic Party.

He raised his party's vote by nearly 2,000 compared with the NDP candidate in 1963 and ran second to Mr. Chatterton.

In contrast, Liberal James Gorst polled nealy 3,000 votes less than the Liberal in 1963.

"It seems to me that the NDP picked up 2,000-odd Liberal votes," said Mr. Gorst after the election was over.

"This must indicate some kind of protest."

Mr. Stephenson said he was "quite pleased" to place second and promised to be a candidate again if members nominate him.

The only woman candidate, Socred Mrs. Vera Pipes, polled 500 more votes than the party's candidate in 1963 but trailed the field and lost her $200 deposit by failing to get at least half the winning candidate's vote total.

"I am encouraged," she said, "as I do feel we are making progress.

"Maybe the country isn't ready for us yet. But it was a very clean campaign and I am willing to be a candidate again."

Mr. Gorst, who said he is "not broken up" at the result, said he would be "delighted" to be candidate again."

About 77 per cent of the 48,210 voters cast ballots to keep Esquimalt-Saanich Conservative in the seventh election since the constituency was created in 1952.

Between 1953 and 1961 the seat was held by George Pearkes, appointed lieutenant-governor four years ago.

Was It All in the Cards for Chatterton?

Deputy returning officers were irked Monday when Progressive Conservative campaign literature kept turning up illegally in polling booths.

The cards were sent out to all electors advising them where each should go to vote. They also carried a box similar to a ballot, with the words Chatterton or Waite beside a big, black X.

One reason the cards found their way illegally into the polling booths was that they carried the instruction "Take this notice with you . . ."

George Chatterton took time at his victory celebration to defend his use of this gimmick.

"It doesn't say take it into the polling booth," he said.

"Where does it mean you should take it?" he was asked.

"Not to the polling booth," he said.

"If you wanted to take it with you and leave it in your car, fine," he added.

"When you say 'Take it with you' you don't mean take it with you?"

"Indeed not," he said.

★ ★ ★

The first poll result received by Victoria returning officer Ray Bryant came from poll number 55. (Poll 55, where are you?). It was no harbinger of things to come. It gave Hunter 16, Waite 14, Brereton 13, Groos 10 and Morrison 0.

★ ★ ★

On the fringe of things at Liberal headquarters stood a forlorn looking man with rumpled clothes, a five-day beard and turned up shoes and a thirsty look.

When the announcement was made that all supporters should now prepare to move to the home of the victorious candidate Dave Groos, he brightened and asked, "Which way is Newport Avenue?"

★ ★ ★

NDP campaign manager in Victoria Neil Hindle said he hoped the advance newspaper polls would be discredited by this election.

He believes they are an evil which should be stopped because some voters are susceptible to the urge to back a winning horse.

★ ★ ★

Esquimalt-Saanich winner George Chatterton took time out Monday night to phone his youngsters at Ottawa when he learned of his re-election.

Sharlie 18, Peter 17 and Valerie 11 were waiting the call even though it was almost midnight there.

His other son, Drew 20, was with him. Drew attends Uvic and spent the day at a volunteer driver for Dad.

Mr. Chatterton said he didn't send out a single scrutineer this year.

"We trusted the DROs and poll clerks."

But he made the rounds of many polls himself, reported NDP candidate Len Stephenson, who kept running into him.

★ ★ ★

Poll 170 was described on signs on the premises at Pole 170 which proves all poor spellers don't work for newspapers.

★ ★ ★

NDP campaigner in Esquimalt-Saanich, Geoff Mitchell, was elated at the fine showing of his candidate in the western end of the riding.

This portion probably will go into Nanaimo-Cowichan and The Islands when redistribution comes about he says—which can only reflect good for the re-elected NDP candidate there, Colin Cameron.

HE'S 7-5 FAVE, BUT ODDS DROP . . .

. . . ON B.C.-OWNED GEORGE ROYAL

Roman Brother All Heart . . . 'And a Mean Little Devil'

LAUREL, Md (AP)—Roman Brother remained the strong 7-to-5 favorite Monday to win the $150,000 Laurel International race Thursday.

But the American horse had to share attention with at least one of the seven rivals he will face in the 1½-mile race over Laurel's sun-baked grass course—George Royal, the big four-year-old bay owned by Ernest C. Hammond and Robert W. Hall of Vancouver. (See Hal Malone's column).

The only shift in the odds Monday was the shortening of the quotation on George Royal to 8 to 1 from 10 to 1 and the lengthening on the United States' Hail to All to 10 to 1 from 8 to 1.

As exercise boy Jerry DeMarzio brought the little four-year-old Roman Brother from Lou Wolfson's Harbor View farm off the track after a long gallop, he was the centre of attraction.

Many spectators, out to see the early morning workouts, seemingly were unable to believe there was so much power and speed packed in such a little frame.

Roman Brother, nearing the $1,000,000 mark in earnings with a bank account of $920,203, is a dwarf alongside such rivals as Hill Rise from George A. Polk's El Peco Ranch of California, Berenjenal, the rangy Argentine, and Diatome, one of the two French entries.

The gelding stands just over 15 hands — 60 inches — and doesn't weigh more than 915 pounds soaking wet.

"He's all heart," said Arturo Bullrich, co-owner with Alejandro Ortila of Beranjenal. "I always have admired him. The way I figure it, he definitely is the horse to beat, with my horse battling Hill Rise and . . . George Royal for a money spot."

Berenejenal was a distant second to Roman Brother in the recent Jockey Club Gold Cup at New York's Aqueduct.

"He is not only all heart, but he is a mean little devil," said Demarzio. "He gives you his best at every race. But don't get too close to him. He'd just as soon take a bite out of your hand."

Brauilio Baeza will ride Roman Brother when the field takes off.

Victory will be worth $90,000, with $25,000 to second, $15,000 to third, $10,000 to fourth and $5,000 to each of the fifth and sixth-place finishers.

As Roman Brother returned to his stall Monday, attention turned to the horses rated behind him in the advance line drawn up by the track's mutuel department. They also were out for gallops over the grass course, which badly needs rain.

"My horse finally has found himself," said veteran trainer Bill Finnegan of Hill Rise. "He really has taken to the grass and I don't mean just to eat it."

The advance line quoted Hill Rise at 4 to 1, with Diatome next at 5 to 1.

Super Sam, British representative, remained at 6 to 1. Berenjenal held at 10 to 1 and France's Carvin at 5 to 1.

Hal Malone LOOKS AT SPORTS

Now the long distance operator was saying: "Here's your party at Laurel." On the line, whining like an air raid siren, came the voice of Donnie Richardson, "Haylo."

Mr. Richardson is an emigrant from Texas. He has pledged allegiance to the Queen, the Canadian Flag, and the income tax department, but in conversation he still has the rich twang of an El Paso cowboy fresh off the range.

WILLIE SHOEMAKER
. . . the coolest

Richardson is holidaying at Laurel, Maryland, with a horse. He is the custodian of George Royal, Canada's hope to right the monetary imbalance between this country and the U.S.

George Royal has won $191,000 in his racing career, $94,053 at U.S. temples of chance. Not many four-year-olds of my acquaintance have done as well. On Thursday he will attempt to relieve the bookkeeper at Laurel of $90,000, first money in the $150,000-added Washington International.

Richardson house-mothers George Royal for Bobby Hall and Ernie Hammond of Vancouver. His job is to ensure that George, a $3,500 purchase, eats well, does not suffer from insomnia, stays out of night clubs and is feeling his oats, so to speak, on Thursday.

"George is real good now," Richardson was saying. He put muscle in "real".

"He wasn't at his peak when he won the Canadian at Woodbine. He was tiahed at the end, but on that wet grass, it was lahk goin' two miles instead of a mile and fiahv eighths. Longden said, though, that if he'd had to go around agin, he'd still have been in front."

Rules Demand Horse Be Accompanied

Longden is John Longden, English-born, Canadian-raised equestrian, at 58 a grandfather and the world's winningest (6,023) helmsman.

Longden guided George in the Canadian championship and steered him into the winner's circle in the $125,000 San Juan Capistrano last March. Behind him that day were such noble aristocrats as Hill Rise and Duel.

Never before had a B.C.-bred invoked such emotion in the hearts of local horse lovers. They sent him telegrams of encouragement like "bon voyage and bring home the bacon, baby needs shoes." In the B.C. Legislature, Premier Bennet interrupted business to laud George.

Longden was scheduled to be aboard George in the International. But at Bay Meadows 10 days ago the stewards found John guilty of careless driving and banned him for 10 days.

Since the rules demand that a horse be accompanied, Hall, Hamond & Co. had to act fast.

"We didn't know what to do," Hall said. "Finally we called Donnie and told him to use his judgment."

'Mr. Cool' Climbs on the Hot Seat

In the past, midget U.S. millionaires have not broken down the doors to get on Canadian horses. But George is different. He puts his pants on one leg at a time like other horses but in the International, he has a big shot. Just the other day, $60,000 (Hall thinks it was all Canadian loot) was wagered on George.

"The phone started ringing here as soon as it was announced that Longden couldn't ride," Richardson was saying. "I heard from Shoemaker, Pierce, Milo Valenzuela, Church and I forget how many others. Somebody wrote that Bill Hartack wanted in too, but that's wrong. He never called and we never called him."

Richardson settled on Shoemaker, called Willie by friends, and "Mr. Shoemaker" by his banker.

"They're all good," Richardson said. "But Shoe's the coolest. Man, with all that dough on the line, you gotta be cool."

Shoemaker won't arrive at Laurel from Aqueduct until the night before the race. But he'll have a fit horse.

Hill Rise Likes Grass Both Ways—

Richardson drilled him a mile in one minute, 40 seconds Saturday—"his last long work." But Shoe knows George. He saw him roll by, a blur of colors, when he was pumping Hill Rise in the San Juan.

With Shoemaker signed, Richardson has no problems except the condition of the track and the seven other entries.

The International is at a mile and a half on turf. But Richardson was saying, "This is the hardest turf I've evah seen. Hasn't rained here for a long time. Looks like it could anytime. Ah'm prayin' it'll staht to come down by Tuesday. Thet would be jes' fine."

Russia is not sending its best, Aniline (do you think Moscow knows something?), but France (Diatome), Argentina (Berejenal) and Britain (Super Sam) are. And of course, there's the Americans, Roman Brother, Hill Rise and Hail to All.

Hill Rise wasn't originally invited. But Hail to All ran a stinker on grass last week and Laurel beckoned Hill Rise, a superior grass horse.

Dudes Might Get Kick in the Pants

Roman Brother is the smallest horse ("he can't go more than 900 pounds"—Richardson) and the wealthiest. With $920,203 in the bank, Roman Brother ranks only behind Kelso, Round Table, Nashua, Carry Back, Citation and Swoon's Son, in personal wealth. But, he has run only once on grass and finished fifth, indicating he prefers his grass eaten and not trampled.

Roman Brother is the big horse on form, but George is the largest on tape.

"George goes 17 hands and weighs about 1,075 now," Richardson was saying. "Thet's his best fightin' weight."

Was he scared of any particular horse?

"All of them," Richardson said.

"They're good or they wouldn't be here."

Pause.

"But we're good or we wouldn't be here. Those dudes bettah not be lookin' around in the stretch because we'll be flyin'."

Quick, where's junior's penny bank?

Toronto Never Like This Says Rangers' Nevin

NEW YORK (AP)—There's a good reason, Bob Nevin explains, why he is the leading scorer for New York Rangers, surprise team of the National Hockey League.

"You get a day off once in a while," he said Monday. "When I was with Toronto there were no days off and you got sick of the ice sometimes. You can leave your best game on the practice rink."

Nevin, the Rangers' captain, scored two goals Sunday night in a 3-2 victory over Detroit Red Wings, last year's pennant winner. The triumph lifted New York into third place. The Rangers were picked to finish fifth in most pre-season polls.

SIXTH IN STANDINGS

Nevin, a right winger, has four goals and four assists and is sixth in the circuit with eight points.

"Bob always has been a very good defensive player," said Emile Francis, Rangers' general manager. "But he has the ability to be a big scorer, too."

Nevin came to New York in February, 1964, in a deal with Toronto.

Nevin added, "we have more depth and our goaltending is better."

Ed Giacomin, a rookie, has been a standout so far in goal and defencemen Arnie Brown and Rod Seiling, who accompanied Nevin to New York in the 1964 trade, also are playing well.

Bobby Hull, Chicago Black Hawks' left winger, is off to the fastest start in NHL history

SECOND HAT-TRICK

Hull registered his second three-goal game of the season against Toronto Maple Leafs in Chicago Sunday night and picked up an equal number of assists for a six-point night as the Hawks routed the Leafs 9-0.

Hull now stands alone atop the scoring list with 17 points in six games, made up of 11 goals and six assists.

Next is Bobby Rousseau, Montreal Canadiens' winger, two points back of Hull with six goals and nine assists in eight games.

The leaders:

B. Hull, Chicago	11	6	17	12
Rousseau, Montreal	6	9	15	2

Chasing Speed Record Is a Perilous Pastime

BONNEVILLE SALT FLATS, Utah.—The urge to drive a car faster than anybody else has made Art Arfons an old hand at cheating disaster.

Death was riding his shoulder again here Sunday when Arfons zoomed to a new land speed record with a 576-mile-an-hour run in a jet-powered racer largely assembled in his backyard.

The 39-year-old Akron, Ohio, driver recaptured the speed title by eclipsing the record of 555 miles an hour set four days earlier by Craig Breedlove.

The searing dash across Western Utah's salt flats almost ended in disaster—after Arfon's "Green Monster" racer passed the timing lights to claim the record from Breedlove. A tire blew, sending the car out of control and damaging it seriously before Arfons brought it to a stop.

It was Arfon's third brush with disaster at Bonneville in 13 months. Arfons appeared to be more shaken by the experience than by the previous two but he managed to shake off the incident.

The incredible midwesterner, who said all along he was confident of surpassing Breedlove's record, admitted "they get a little harder each time" but added, "you learn a little more each time you run."

Arfon's two runs pushed his average 21 miles an hour above the Breedlove figure—a mark believed unreachable with the Green Monster. Arfon's racer is smaller and lighter than Breedlove's and cost considerably less.

The veteran Ohio driver, who got most of his racing experience in the drag circuit, bought a J79 jet engine for his racer from a war surplus store. Much of the work on the car was done in the Arfons' backyard in Akron.

APPEARED STUNNED

Arfons appeared stunned as he climbed from the car at the conclusion of his wild ride. As crewmen and reporters raced to the track, smoke was still rising above the car. Some of the smoke came from the car's cockpit and Arfons said he thought there was oil smoke coming from somewhere in the car.

He calmly opened the canopy and this released the smoke. The glass on the canopy was shattered by the terrific force of the wind.

Most of the damage to the car was to the right rear section. The force of the blowout scattered pieces of tire on the track. The fiberglas air intake section in the front also cracked under the impact.

His official average was 576.553 m.p.h.

Breedlove may return to Bonneville the week of Nov. 15-20 in another bid to regain the crown.

WIN FOUR EVENTS

Spartans Set Pace In Duncan Gallops

DUNCAN — Thinclads from Victoria and Nanaimo dominated a cross-country meet here on the weekend.

Spartan Track Club of Victoria won four of six events. The other two were seized by Nanaimo entries.

In terms of a gritty performance, Victoria's Steve Sullivan took the crown.

Sully took the junior boys (under 19) mile-and-three-quarters gallop, came back in half an hour to run third in the men's open over 2½ miles.

Spartan mates John Cliff and Norm Patenaude staged a nostril-to-nostril battle in the open before Cliff pulled ahead in the last few yards.

Results:

Midget Girls (0.6 mile): 1. Gloria Young, Spartans 4:27.4; 2. Janet Lemon, Nanaimo, 4:27.9; 3. Jane Robinson, Duncan, 4:27.7.

DRIFTING LEAFS SEEK CARL 'RUDDER' BREWER

TORONTO (CP)—Toronto Maple Leafs of the National Hockey League will make a further attempt to get Carl Brewer to rejoin the team, a Leaf executive says.

Harold Ballard, executive vice-president of Maple Leaf Gardens, says an overture to the 27-year-old defenceman, who quit the team several weeks ago, will be made soon.

Ballard said the Leafs without Brewer are "like a ship without a rudder. You don't realize how important he is until you haven't got him."

The Leafs were defeated 9-0 at Chicago Sunday.

LEAFS-BUCK SERIES

Defences Could Decide Outcome

People who score the goals usually get the credit but it could be a battle of defence when Victoria Maple Leafs and Portland Buckaroos tangle this week in an attempt to decide which club belongs in front in the Western Hockey League lead.

Leafs holding first place with a two-point margin over the Bucks, face their rivals Wednesday night in Portland and entertain the Bucks in a return bout Saturday night at Memorial Arena.

Each club has a candidate for league scoring honors but they have fashioned several of their victories this season on outstanding defensive work.

Results of defensive excellence have Victoria's Al Millar and Portland's Don Head tied for first place in the goaltending records. Both have played 10 games and both own 2.50-goals-against averages.

MARIO LAUDS WORKERS

Victoria coach Frank Mario had words of praise for his defence Monday after the Leafs had completed a two-game weekend sweep over Seattle Totems.

Figures for the season give support to Mario's words. The Leafs have yielded only three goals while shorthanded through penalties and penalty-killing work had set the stage for most of their victories.

Jones slipped one point in front of Victoria defenceman Fred Hucul over the weekend. Hucul has a total of 16 points from three goals and 13 assists.

Cliff Schmautz of Portland has fired the most goals—nine—and leads Victoria's Bob Barlow by one marker.

However, the Leafs will be playing with fire if they take many penalties against the Buckaroos. The Bucks are slickers when they get an extra man and their power-play punch has helped boost Art Jones into the league scoring lead.

Here are the Victoria scoring figures:

Samaritan Lands in Bullpen

MIAMI, Fla. (AP)—Pedro (Pete) Ramos, New York Yankees relief pitcher, found himself in a different bullpen Sunday night—the Miami police booking office.

Ramos, 30, who lives in Miami during the off-season, was arrested on a charge of interfering with a police officer. He posted $50 bond pending a court appearance today.

It started when two patrolmen arrested Rolando Arteaga, 36, outside a Miami restaurant on a charge of being drunk.

Ramos, a Cuban, said Monday, "I didn't even know this fellow who was being arrested but a girl he was with asked me if I spoke English and if I would help.

"I explained to the officer who was questioning the man that I wanted to help and . . . then the other officer told me, 'Get out of here.'

". . . then he said, "You're under arrest.'"

Ace at Oak Bay

Art Slater hit golfing perfection Monday at Victoria Golf Club, scoring a hole-in-one on the 146-yard second hole.

Slater, who was playing with Jay Wilson, Bill Thompson and Bill Pinniger, used an eight iron for his ace.

'PATTERSON'S GLASS JAW . . .

. . . MAKES IT EASY TO PREDICT'

Tunney, Schmeling Go for Clay in Three

GENE TUNNEY

BERLIN (UPI) — Former world heavyweight champions Gene Tunney and Max Schmeling predict Cassius Clay will quickly find Floyd Patterson's "glass chin" in their world championship bout in Las Vegas Nov. 22.

The two boxing greats bewailed the sad state of prize fighting at a news conference at West Berlin's Tempelhof airport. Tunney went there to meet Schmeling who flew in from Hamburg.

Tunney said, "never before has boxing sunk to the low it has now.

"It cannot sink any lower and therefore the only direction it can go is up," he said.

Schmeling nodded in agreement.

"The Clay-Patterson fight will not help the situation," Tunney said. "Patterson in the last few years has given such weak performances that he has no right to a title fight.

"His glass jaw makes it easy to predict that Clay will knock him out in two or three rounds."

"Clay is a technically excellent boxer," Tunney said. "He has speed, and although I am in doubt about his punch, he is superior to all present heavyweights."

Schmeling agreed, saying, "I know Patterson. He is a fine fellow and a good boxer but he can't take a punch. Clay will win fast."

Schmeling attributed the lack of "white hopes" to prosperity.

"Today, white teen-agers have a lot of pocket money, they get almost everything they want and they don't have to struggle for things as we did.

"But that's not true for the Negroes in America. They still are what you call hungry and only hungry fighters are good ones," Schmeling said.

Schmeling, now an executive in Germany, said Germany has only one good heavyweight, European champion Karl Mildenberger. But he said Mildenberger is no match for top Americans.

Both Tunney and Schmeling looked fit. Tunney, 68, outpointed Jack Dempsey for the title in 1926. Schmeling, 60, won the vacant title on a foul by Jack Sharkey.

No Alps, Snow But Ski Slopes Busy in Britain

By JIM CONWAY

LONDON (CP)—Skiing could be heading for a boom in Britain, even without snow.

Artificial ski-runs made of nylon are appearing at several towns and may become a major recreational activity leading to an increase in Britain's skiers. They give beginners a chance to try out at minimum cost what often proves to be an expensive sport.

As one expert put it: "The first week of a skiing holiday is largely wasted getting fit and beginners often have to go through so much agony on their first attempt at skiing that they give up the sport before they've really started.

"All that is avoided if you have the use of an artificial slope."

Construction is simple. The slope is made of nylon strands bonded into inch-long tufts which are fixed to sections of metal trellis. These are mounted on a wooden or natural slope about 100 yards long.

The manufacturers say skiing on nylon differs only slightly from skiing on snow. The main difference is in technique. Because there is less give in the surface texture, the skis have to be kept flatter to maintain momentum.

One of the most up-to-date artificial runs is at the south coast resort of Torquay, in Devon. The 80-yard-long slope, which lies on high ground above a holiday camp, was built originally as an off-beat amusement for summer vactationers, but it also attracted serious enthusiasts. Now during the resort's off-season, between October and February, the keen skiers have the slope to themselves.

EXPENSIVE TO BUILD

Initial construction costs are fairly high. About £10 ($30) a square yard is average. The bill for the Torquay slope ran to £7,000.

Advocates of skiing on artificial surfaces do not suggest it could replace skiing on snow, but they stress it could help in instruction and for practice. Britain lacks the climate or conditions for skiing, except in the Scottish highlands for short periods in winter.

Several private groups as well as municipal authorities are studying the possibility of artificial slopes. Some have already been completed at Colwyn Bay and Pls-y-Brenin in Wales and Aviemore and Inverness in the highlands of Scotland.

OTHER RUNS ON WAY

Other slopes are open or being constructed in England. Besides the run at Torquay, there is one at the new community of Welwyn Garden City in Hertfordshire and the latest opened at Crystal Palace in south London at the end of October.

The Crystal Palace run is 500 square yards in size and shaped like an inverted Y so that novices will be able to practise on the lower slopes, leaving the main run for the experts.

Built under the sponsorship of the Greater London Council, it is run by the council for the public. Learners can take course of 6½ hour lessons for about $10 and anyone will be able to rent skis and boots for $1.

BUSY MAN Wednesday will be Charley Smith, who will be in action with touring Harlem Clowns in pair of exhibition basketball games at Oak Bay High School. Clowns will play Oak Bay High in school gymnasium at noon and face Victoria Chinooks, Canadian junior champs, at 8 p.m.

REJECTS PROPOSAL . . . . . . TO REDUCE POWERS

AAU Declines Dilution

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Amateur Athletic Union of Canada ended its annual meeting here by rejecting a proposal to dilute its powers.

Delegates agreed with an AAU committee report which opposed the plan of professor Osborne of the University of British Columbia's physical education department.

Prof. Osborne said in a speech last Thursday the AAU should "help its individual sport bodies to become autonomous" and gradually fade out as an over-all athletic regulatory body.

Delegates elected E. W. Stinson of Regina as president, succeeding Merv Ferguson of Vancouver. Don Goodwin of Halifax and H. N. Andrews of Regina were named vice-presidents. Neil Farrell of Hamilton was chosen secretary and George Arnold of Toronto, treasurer.

During a weekend committee meeting AAU members discussed a proposal to organize a three-nation track and field meet.

Officials said "things were coming along nicely" in the plan to celebrate Canada's centennial in 1967 by inviting Britain and France to compete in the championships.

In earlier sessions the AAU named its outstanding athletes for 1965.

AT UPLANDS THURSDAY

Annual Golf Tourney Draws Bumper Entry

Golfers have again stamped their approval on the annual Remembrance Day tournament at Uplands by filing a bumper list of entries.

Because of the large field of 152 swingers, no post entries will be permitted in Thursday's handicap event, except on a replacement basis.

In city button competition last weekend, Art Donaldson and Dave Fanthorpe of Gorge Vale unloosed a birdie barrage to capture the open buttons. Fanthorpe and Donaldson were six under par at Gorge Vale when they defeated Colwood holders Ricky Kent and Urban Allen, 5 and 4.

In a junior button match between Uplands pairs, Roger Bishop and Al Cliff upset holders Marty Smith and Daye Zabel.

Five Contests On Hoop Card

First United and Boys' Club came out on top in Victoria and District Basketball Association games played Monday night at S. J. Willis Junior High School.

First United "B" romped to a 27-12 triumph over St. Anne's in a midget girls' tussle.

Boys' Club outscored their rivals in every quarter to post a 37-20 victory over Brentwood in a bantam boys' game. Barry Moen potted 25 points to pace the winners' attack.

Five games are carded at S. J. Willis tonight.

At 6:30 it will be St. Louis College and Cordova Bay in a pre-midget boys' game and St. Louis vs Metropolitan in the midget boys' contest.

AVERAGE PERSON BETTER OFF

Growing Prosperity Displayed in China

Peter Dalhoff, foreign affairs commentator of Denmark's national television service, spent four weeks in China assembling material for Danish programs. In this article he reports on the life of an "average" man and his family in Peking.

By PETER DALHOFF

PEKING (AP) — Syn Chin-Kang, 28, is employed at Peking's Textile Factory No. 2 as a spinner. His wife, Pangwe Hua, is employed at the same factory and each earns 75 yuan a month. They have two children, a boy and a girl, five and three years old.

They are healthy and handsome and they live in a modern two-room flat with kitchen and toilet not far from the factory. They have Chairman Mao's collected works on their bookshelf.

Syn and his family apparently live the way the party would like all Chinese workers to live, since their home is among the private residences shown by the foreign minister to visiting foreigners.

Questioned, Syn said he paid five yuan (about $2 Canadian) for the flat monthly, including gas, electricity and central heating. It costs 20 yuan a month to send their children to kindergarten; they put 30 to 50 yuan in the bank each month and the remainder—nearly 100 yuan — is spent on food and clothing. They pay no income tax.

To what extent is Syn really typical of the majority of Chinese workers?

Comparing notes with Western residents in Peking and on the basis of observations made during four weeks in China, it appeared that Syn could very well be regarded as an example of an average Chinese worker in some fields, but not in all.

WAGES VARY

There are workers — for instance, the very hard-working pedicab drivers and some categories of workers in the coal and steel industries—who earn 90 to 100 yuan a month, but most monthly wages appear to be about 60 yuan. Syn and his wife apparently belonged to the upper half of wage earners.

His home was typical of some Peking homes. Blocks of flats have been put up over large areas in the periphery of Peking, and hundreds of thousands of people now are living under more or less the same housing conditions as Syn and his family.

But even a larger number is still confined to old, dilapidated one - storey houses in narrow and often ill-smelling streets of old Peking. As the city authority plans to clear the slums, little is spent on maintenance.

It is possible to look into these houses when walking through the streets in Peking, in Shanghai and Canton, since the doors are often open.

FURNITURE SPARSE

The furniture normally consists of one or two large beds or bunks, a table and a few low stools. The cooking is usually done in the same room or sometimes on a coal stove outside in the street. In many homes the walls are covered with colored clippings of magazine illustrations.

To a European, the conditions under which most Chinese city dwellers live are depressing, but at least the slums are gradually giving way to new houses and most people certainly do not live worse—rather better—than many inhabitants of, for instance, Bangkok or Bombay.

On the credit side also is the absence of beggars, especially begging children, who are seen in great numbers in the cities of other Asian countries.

Few adults and even fewer children wear rags, the overwhelming majority of both men and women being dressed in working jackets and trousers of blue cotton cloth.

Another evidence of a growing prosperity is the huge number of new bicycles that fill the streets when people go to and from their work. Automobiles, however, still seem to be a dream of a distant future to most Chinese families.

SHORTAGE OVERCOME

The food shortage that was reported in China a few years ago has apparently been completely overcome. Shops and food stores have an abundance of food—meat, vegetables, fruit and bread. Only rice and cotton cloth are rationed, but you can have a large bowl of rice without giving up ration cards in any restaurant or canteen for only 0.15 yuan.

ATTENTION TURNS TO RED CHINA

UN Urges N-Bomb Conference

UNITED NATIONS (CP)—A major debate shaped up today on the seating of Communist China in the United Nations after Monday's overwhelming approval of a resolution urging the quick resumption of negotiations in Geneva on a treaty to halt the spread of nuclear weapons.

The debate on the question of Communist Chinese representation was opened Monday afternoon by Cambodia, which described the Nationalist Chinese island of Formosa as part of China.

The Chinese question is expected to occupy the General Assembly for the entire week before coming up for a vote, UN sources said. Again China was not expected to receive the two-thirds majority vote required for membership in the 117-nation organization.

The last time the Chinese issue came to a vote was in 1963 when 57 members opposed admission, 41 favored it and 12 countries abstained.

Canada is expected to continue to oppose the seating of the Peking government while Britain likely will vote in favor as she had done in the past.

OPENS DEBATE

Cambodia opened the debate on behalf of 11 non-aligned and Communist nations

Ambassador Huot Sambath of Cambodia called on the assembly to invite the Communist Chinese delegation to take permanent seats in the UN and to request the representatives of the Formosa regime to leave.

U.S. Ambassador Arthur Goldberg said Communist Chinese membership would only encourage Peking "on its present path of violence."

He accused the Peking regime of supporting aggression against South Viet Nam and Laos and of threatening Thailand.

The Soviet Union took special exception to Goldberg's remarks on Viet Nam and Soviet Delegate Nikolai Fedorenko retaliated by accusing the U.S. of launching a "monstrous policy" in Viet Nam that amounted to a "criminal operation."

Fedorenko joined Cambodia in calling for the admission of Peking and said the Americans were trying "by hook or crook" to keep Communist China out.

PEACE RIVER PROJECT

Weather Halts Filling at Dam

VANCOUVER (CP) — Construction of the giant Portage Mountain dam for British Columbia's Peace River power project has been brought to a halt by the onslaught of winter.

B.C. Hydro and Power Authority announced today, however that work on the underground powerhouse and the 500,000-volt transmission that will carry Peace power 575 miles to southwestern B.C. beginning late in 1968, will continue throughout the winter.

But other work has been halted by the snow and cold.

Hydro said that despite a delayed start-up last spring due to an unusually heavy snow which presisted until late April, more than 17,000,000 cubic yards of fill had been placed and compacted on the huge dam this year, enough to build a wall 100 feet high and eight feet wide for a distance of 100 miles.

AROUND THE CLOCK

The fill operation went on 24 hours a day, seven days a week, interrupted only by unusual rains and necessary equipment maintenance.

The dam, which will eventually rise to a height of 600 feet at its site near Hudson Hope, has now risen to a height of 240 feet above the riverbed.

Hydro said winter's unrelieved sub-freezing temperatures bring fill placement operations to a halt because the frozen earth fill material cannot be compacted to rigid engineering specifications under such conditions.

Underground and unaffected by the freezing weather, rock and tunnel workers continue to blast out the 10 penstocks which will direct reservoir water down to the turbines to be installed in the powerhouse. Also underway is excavation of a giant underground cavern which will house the powerhouse.

COURT HALTS PICKETING

VANCOUVER (CP) — Work resumed on the Mica Creek section of the Columbia River dam project after oil workers' pickets caused an eight-hour work stoppage Monday.

An injunction, ordering pickets removed, was issued to B.C. Hydro and Columbia hydro contractors in B.C. supreme court here.

About 350 construction workers earlier refused to go to work at the dam site when the road to the project was barred by pickets carrying placards reading "on strike at BA."

Local Cadet Wins Trip Of Lifetime

A city sea cadet will leave here Saturday morning on a trip of a lifetime.

He is Michael Parker, 1252 Roslyn, one of 16 sea cadets across the country who will join the destroyer-escort HMCS Margaree.

The recently converted warship is leaving Esquimalt to join the Atlantic command in Halifax.

The voyage there will take the warship to several foreign ports and through the Panama Canal.

Michael, 17, is a member of Rainbow Sea Cadet Corps. He was awarded the trip for his proficiency and devotion to to duty.

When he joins Margaree Saturday along with the other cadets, he will be assimilated into her crew and will do regular seamen's chores.

The Margaree is expected to reach Halifax Dec. 9.

Deep-sea divers say the world's oceans are already littered with cans, bottles and waste thrown overboard from ships.

Sidney Loses Yet Another Commissioner

Sidney village commissioner Douglas Taylor resigned Monday.

He is the fifth commissioner to quit council in the past six months.

Mr. Taylor, whose term of office expires next year, said his resignation was to open up another seat on council at the forthcoming election on Dec. 11.

"I feel that I can best serve the people of the village by giving up my seat on council and thereby allowing the maximum number of new faces possible on council," he said.

His resignation means four council seats will be contested next month.

COUNCIL SPLIT

The election is expected to be hotly contested in view of a split on council over village policies and a $185,000 road development program defeated at the polls in October.

Mr. Taylor, along with Commissioners A. Boas and L. A. Christian earlier in the year tangled with Joseph G. Mitchell over administrative policies, claiming he conducted some village business without consulting council.

Mr. Mitchell resigned and succeeded by Commissioner H. W. B. Heward, who along with village chairman A. A. Cormack resigned in August on the grounds the three councillors did not consult them in preparing a road development program.

Mr. Cormack was succeeded by Lt.-Col. J. H. Larocque who also quit council, claiming members of council had conducted village business without consulting him.

As things stand now, council is composed of Commissioners A. Boas, L. A. Christian and John Kingerlee.

HAIL THE TOURISTS

They Don't Wreck, They Just Spend!

Tourists don't cut down any trees and don't dig up any minerals, Mike Heppell, acting commissioner of the Victoria and Vancouver Island Publicity Bureau, told a meeting of the Gyro Club on Monday.

"Tourism is an $80 million a year cash business in Victoria and on the Island. If we can provide an image, and make life north of the 59th parallel seem different, that figure will climb."

Mr. Heppell predicts a $200 million tourist business by 1975

COMPETITIVE

But the business is highly competitive, he said.

The publicity bureau actively promotes the city and the Island. Every year nearly 4,000 packages of promotional materials go to consulates, travel bureaus and hotels in the United States.

The bureau's staff gives out 800,000 brochures and 50,000 city maps from its Government St office, Mr. Heppell said.

American tourists ask Mr Heppell some funny questions: "How long is a Canadian mile?" "Where do we see the King?"

Victorians and islanders can make the tourist's visit more pleasant by being friendly themselves, he said.

Ben Bella Can Write

ALGIERS (UPI) — Deposed president Ahmed Ben Bella and three of his imprisoned former aides have been authorized to correspond with their families, a reliable source said here today. The source said they were given the authorization Nov. 1, the 11th anniversary of the launching of the Algerian revolution, in which Ben Bella was a leader.

Announce New Healing Substance... Shrinks Piles, Checks Itch

Exclusive healing substance proven to shrink hemorrhoids...and repair damaged tissue.

A renowned research institute has found a unique healing substance with the ability to shrink hemorrhoids painlessly. It relieves itching and discomfort in minutes and speeds up healing of the injured, inflamed tissues.

One hemorrhoidal case history after another reported "very striking improvement." Pain was promptly and gently relieved . . . actual reduction or retraction (shrinking) took place.

Among these case histories were a variety of hemorrhoidal conditions. Relief even occurred in cases of long standing, and most important of all, results were so thorough that this improvement was maintained over a period of many months.

This was accomplished with a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne) which quickly helps heal injured cells and stimulates growth of new tissue. Bio-Dyne is offered in ointment and suppository form called Preparation H.

In addition to actually shrinking hemorrhoids, Preparation H lubricates and makes elimination less painful. It helps prevent infection which is a principal cause of hemorrhoids.

Just ask your druggist for Preparation H Suppositories or Preparation H Ointment (with a special applicator).

Arthur Mayse

Since nothing was demanded of us last Saturday night, we settled down to enjoy "The Kidnappers," a durable film tale of early-century Cape Breton which, in spite of cuts apparently made with a blunt axe, was the best show on any channel.

Even though we had seen it a couple of times before, we were captivated all over again by the two marvellously natural Canadian-Scottish small boys who yearn for a dog, and their grim, prickly-proud grandfather who sells his boots to buy them one.

As you may recall, this denouement is preceded by scenes in which the old tyrant bears down pretty hard on his grandsons. One such deals with a beating in the farm woodshed,

At this point our son and daughter became properly indignant.

For the rest of the picture, they insisted on regarding the grandfather as an absolute brute, and were not entirely mollified when he came round in the matter of the dog.

They were wrong, of course. He was, simply, a cape Breton Highlander of the country sort—although sterner than most—who was determined to do his duty as he saw it.

This is a habit of your Cape Bretoner. The land he lives in undoubtedly has something to do with the fact; it is harsh as it is beautiful, and even today, it does not yield an easy living to its people. For this reason, they tend to be firm of character.

★ ★ ★

Once, years ago, I witnessed the disciplining of a young Cape Bretoner. It was an awesome sight.

On the late afternoon this came about, I was driving fast and alone from the Strait of Canso north to Sydney and Louisburg.

Presently at the far end of a long, empty straightaway, I spotted someone walking the road shoulder. At closer range, the figure emerged as a woman pulling a child's wagon loaded with what looked to be firewood. On top of this cargo perched a small boy.

I pulled my speed down; but when the kid hopped off the wagon and darted across the road, my car was still moving at a brisk clip. As he disappeared under the nose, I swung hard over, coming to a stop a hectic few seconds later in the tall grass and weeds of a fallow field.

I looked around, afraid of what might be revealed. What I saw was the woman sitting on the wagon with the boy over her knee.

She spanked him with dignity and deliberation, swinging her hand high for each measured whack. Sitting in my car, which had remained upright, I winced at each new impact of hand on seat.

While it wasn't precisely a beating, it was quite a spanking, and if that young fellow isn't careful in traffic today, the blame is not chargeable to his mama!

The woman waited while I bounced my car out of the field, which, luckily for me, wasn't fenced or ditched. Then with that same iron dignity she apologized for her son's behavior—a tall, strong, farm woman with a Scots accent and the stern Cape Breton sense of duty.

★ ★ ★

This is not to be interpreted as a pitch for corporal punishment. I never had much of a spanking arm myself, and my gentle wife never seemed to need one.

Curiously, though, at the rare times when our young reproach us, it is not for strictness but for having been too soft with them in their formative years. We shouldn't have stood for as much backchat, and we should (now they tell us!) have made them work harder around the place.

Moreover, we're give to understand that any number of their friends hold similar opinions about their own upbringing, and insist they will raise their children more rigorously.

I'm not sure how we should interpret this trend. But it could mean a return to the mores of our grandfathers, who, as you may recall, neither spoiled the child nor spared the rod.

Jan. 27 Opening For Legislature

By JOHN MIKA
Times Legislative Reporter

Federal election? What federal election?

Premier W. A. C. Bennett today announced the provincial legislature will open again Jan. 27.

The premier was reported to have brushed the federal election from his mind and dived into provincial affairs again. He was busy with his deputy finance minister all morning going over estimates in preparation for his budget speech about mid-February.

WEEK LATER

The third session of the 27th parliament of B.C. will open on the traditional Thursday but about a week later than usual.

The slow start apparently is needed to give the premier and his ministers a little extra time to catch up on the pre-session routine of estimates and legislation proposals because they have fallen behind as a result of overseas trips and electioneering.

Prospects at the moment appear to point at a normal length of about six to eight weeks for the session and a series of major spending announcements — seldom the stuff of controversy—are expected to take up most of the time.

Speaker William Murray, of Prince Rupert, has been in Victoria frequently during the past two weeks and he will be followed in about six weeks' time by the other out-of-town members.

The Throne Speech read by Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes will be heard by 33 Social Credit MLAs, 14 New Democratic Party members and five Liberals — as well as the usual crush of leading citizens of the B.C. community.

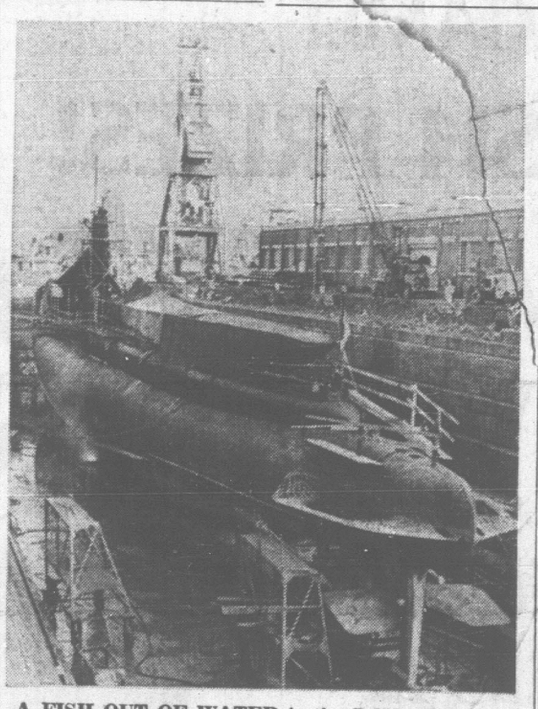
'HABITUAL' HEARING ON DEC. 9

A hearing will be held Dec. 9 to determine if a 26-year-old Victoria man is an habitual criminal.

The date for the hearing was set in central court today.

John N. L. Smith faces a lifetime in jail if Magistrate J. A. Byers finds he is an habitual criminal. The hearing had been postponed numerous times to allow Smith to appeal his most recent conviction all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada.



A FISH OUT OF WATER is the RCN submarine HMCS Grilse pictured in the middle of interim dry-docking between major refits at HMC Dockyard. Workmen are checking underwater valves, doing pressure tests, surveying the hull and overhauling the ship's four engines. Members of the ship's company pitch in too—unusual for an RCN ship—because of the specialization required on the overhaul. Sub will be back in action after Christmas. (Times Photo.)

4-H Winners Off To East For Conference

A group of 14 young farm people, representing 4-H clubs from various parts of B.C. left Victoria Monday for the National 4-H Club conference in Ottawa and Toronto Nov. 11-17.

The party, which includes five Island delegates, is accompanied by Wayne Wickens, 4-H Club specialist; Rosemary Meadows, home economist, and Murray Soder, extension division, Kamloops, all employed by the B.C. department of agriculture.

Island representatives are Reg. Hoole, 5842 Oldfield Road; Jean Money, Sooke; Anne Lees, 4003 Bow Road; Beverley Feather, Nanaimo, and Bruce McKinnon, Alberni.

The delegates won the trip to Ottawa and Toronto at provincial 4-H competitions at Tranquille this summer. They were selected for their 4-H work, general knowledge and leadership qualities.

The conference will open in Ottawa where young people from Canada's 10 provinces will discuss citizenship and agricultural problems.

MEET VANIERS

During their stay they will be received by Governor-General and Mrs. Vanier, visit the Parliament Buildings, National Art Gallery and other points of interest.

They will be in Toronto on Nov. 15 where the conference will continue with discussions around the theme "To understand our role in developing sound government for the future."

They will visit the Royal Winter Fair, the largest fair of its kind in North America, the Royal Ontario Museum and tour the Niagara Falls area.

Prior to leaving for the east, the young delegates toured Victoria, visited the Legislative Buildings and met Agricultural Minister Frank Richter.

They were also received Monday at Government House by Lieut.-Governor G. R. Pearkes and Mrs. Pearkes.

BUSINESSMEN PROTEST TRAFFIC CLOSURE PLAN

Victoria city council will reconsider plans to close a block of Bastion Street to all but pedestrians because businesses have protested.

Arguments put forward today by Humber's furniture and a Bank of Montreal branch manager were supported by results of a city engineering parking survey.

Approaches were made to Bastion Square redevelopment committee, which proposes closing the block of Bastion between Government and Langley to make a pedestrian walk into the square.

Bruce Humber said a private traffic survey showed that on Oct. 26 an average 97 cars per hour used the one-way street between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The block has five 12-minute parking meters which were used by an average of 5.3 cars an hour for seven hours Oct. 28, the engineer's survey showed.

"This is quite a surprise," Mayor R. B. Wilson said, suggesting that an attractive entry to the square might be created while retaining the street for traffic.

He said Humber's brief favoring vehicle and pedestrian access with an arch, kiosk, hanging baskets and flags around the entrance "makes a great deal of sense."

The committee asked engineering consultants Willis and Cunliffe to make an alternative suggestion for the use of Bastion Street.

Mayor Wilson said the idea of redevelopment is to keep business healthy, and the only objective in closing the street to traffic was to make an attractive entry to the square, which still may be accomplished.

Joseph Cunliffe said he felt the street would be seriously impaired as a pedestrian way if vehicle use is allowed.

Comptroller-treasurer James Bramley said people will have to get away from the idea of "driving right up to the door."

Proposed downtown mall development, perhaps within five years, will cause a change in thinking of people now dependent on parking meters, he said.

"Street parking is essential to the business of a bank," said George Maycock, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Government and Bastion.

He pointed out meters have already disappeared from the west side of Government outside the bank.

View Royal Estimates 'Way Out'

Campbell Raps Group Trying to Form Town

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell today went out of his way to slam efforts of a group urging incorporation of View Royal as a separate municipality.

The minister came into the press gallery at the Legislative Buildings to tell reporters the group's estimates of cost for civic staff salaries "are completely out of line."

An inquiry appointed by his department recommended that the unorganized View Royal area amalgamate with Esquimalt municipality but the separate incorporation group is competing for ratepayers' approval.

NO APPLICATION

Mr. Campbell said an estimate of less than $6,000 annual salary for a municipal clerk-assessor-treasurer was so far below the going rate in Greater Victoria for comparable work that he did not think anyone would apply for the post.

He added a doubt that any individual "would have so many talents" or want the responsibilities of a post involving all three jobs.

"They also suggest some sort of engineer-works foreman-building inspector, again at a salary estimate that is way too low," he said.

The minister said the group's report was not submitted to him but he happened to obtain a copy and was making his remarks as a matter of public interest.

The ratepayers will have to decide for themselves whether they want amalgamation or separate incorporation, he said.

Either course will require a favorable vote before it can be implemented.

Feathered Friends Flocking

Cockatoos and cardinals, pintails and parakeets will be star attractions at a two-day bird show next week, sponsored by the Vancouver Island Cage Bird Society.

Other feathered features of the event, to be held Nov. 19 and 20, will be several breeds of budgies and canaries, including the colorful Red Factors.

A dazzling display of tropical birds will also be on show, ranging from exotic sulphur-crested cockatoos to tiny, brilliantly plumaged fire finches.

The show, the 14th annual held by the society, is expected to attract over 200 entries from up-Island and possibly some from mainland breeders.

VANCOUVER JUDGE

Judge for the budgerigar section will be Mrs. Rose Miazga of Vancouver, and Vern Davidson, a local bird breeder, will judge the canaries and the foreign bird section.

A competition for the most attractive display of birds will be judged by representatives from the Victoria Daily Times and the Daily Colonist.

The show, to be held in Norway House, 1110 Hillside, will be open to the public from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, Nov. 19, and from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 20.

LIKES MOONEY

Former Clerk Won't Run In Mayoralty

Defeated Monday in his first bid for political office, former city clerk Frank Hunter today said he would not run for mayor next month.

He dashed speculation after admitting he had been approached to seek the office when Mayor R. B. Wilson steps down.

Mr. Hunter said he would feel unhappy opposing Ald. M. H. Mooney who is seeking the mayor's seat.

APPROPRIATE

Ald. Mooney has been 14 years as an alderman and is regarded as the senior city alderman and it is appropriate he should seek the mayor's seat, Mr. Hunter said.

He would not be unwilling to assist Ald. Mooney in his campaign, he said.

Ald. Mooney, a Social Credit candidate in the 1963 federal election, was at Mr. Hunter's headquarters Monday night.

Break-In Trial Launches Fall Assizes

The Fall Assizes opened in Victoria Law Courts today with the trial of Gerald Brune, Sidney Travers and Russell Bowcott on a charge of breaking and entering and stealing a safe from the Fairfield Pharmacy, 300 Cook Street.

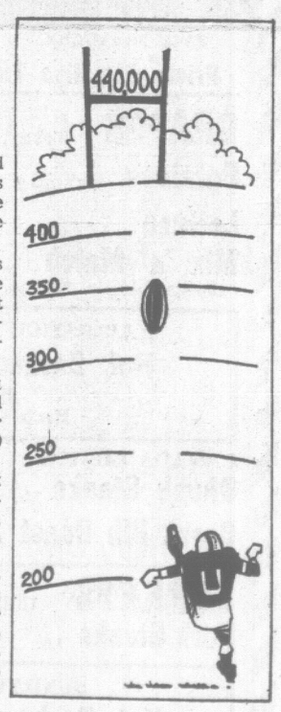
The break-in occurred on July 6 last.

Crown prosecutor in the trial is Louis F. Lindholm. Alan Bigelow is defending Brune. Dermod Owen-Flood is appearing for Travers and Bowcott.

The case is being heard by a judge and 12-man jury.

Scheduled for hearing Nov. 15 at 11 a.m. is the trial of Mary Jean Bilton, 3138 Cook Street, charged with manslaughter involving the death of her six-month-old baby girl last June.

Help Score 'Fair Share' Goal



United Appeal total edged over the 80 per cent mark this morning with $352,871 in the fund—an increase of $800 since Monday afternoon.

The percentage — 80.3 — is just enough to show on the books and demonstrate that the campaign really is four-fifths of the way along towards its $439,210 target.

The United Appeal booth at Yates and Douglas, staffed Monday by the Victorian Order of Nurses, collected over $200 from downtown contributors.

A particular pat on the back was delivered to Appeal headquarters on the weekend by a caller who asked that her name be withheld.

A Wedgewood Avenue resident, she had never met "nicer, more efficient or politer" youngsters than the members of the Oak Bay Chapter, Order of DeMolay, who were helping with the residential canvass in the district.

Most recent Appeal citizenship award is a plaque which goes to the Social Welfare Department of the city, 1947 Cook, for the second time for $256 contributed by 12 of their employees.

Fifth time winner of the plaque award is Crystal Springs Beverage Company, which scored a $170 donation from 17 of its employees.

Ask The Times

Q. Why isn't Hockey Night in Canada broadcast over the radio any more? M.S.

A. It still is. Only the night has been changed. Now Sunday is Hockey Night in Canada for radio listeners. TV coverage of NHL games is still Saturday and Wednesday evenings.

Q. Is it safe to can salmon which has been held in the deep-freeze? L.R.D.

A. Yes, as long as you don't leave it in a thawed condition too long, according to a local cannery.

Anyone wishing a question answered is invited to send the problem along to the Times, addressed to "Ask the Times" Editor. Questions and answers will be published daily.

Doctors Disagree In Impaired Case

A doctor testified in central court today that some evidence given by another medical practitioner in an impaired driving case was "rubbish, just rubbish."

Dr. John H. Patterson was giving evidence for the defence in the case against Ronald Sjodin, 659 Grenville. Sjodin was arrested for impaired driving on Douglas Oct. 4.

At the conclusion of Dr. Patterson's evidence the Crown prosecutor, John McIlree, said the doctor had made such "sweeping statements" that he wanted to study a transcript of what was said before cross-examining.

The case was adjourned to Nov. 30 for completion.

DIABETES

Dr. Patterson said he has examined Sjodin and diagnosed him as suffering from previously undetected diabetes.

Dr. Patterson said there is no way for a man with undiagnosed diabetes to be tested to determine if he is impaired by alcohol.

He said the symptoms of too much insulin in a person are similar to the symptons of intoxication with the exception of the smell of alcohol on the breath.

Dr. Patterson dealt with various symptoms that Dr. E. L. McNiven, the police doctor, noted in Sjodin shortly after the accused's arrest.

Dilated pupils in themselves are not evidence of impairment, said Dr. Patterson. He also said that a flushed face could be due to untreated diabetes.

A swaying on the part of the accused may have been due to an ear disease that affected Sjodin's balance.

He said bloodshot eyes were probably caused by hay fever.

Dr. Patterson said Sjodin has the scars of a shoulder injury and this injury may account for the fact he was unable to perfectely perform certain co-ordination tests.

DEPARTURE DELAYED BY KASHMIR DISPUTE

Graduate from Uvic to Teach in India

BILL HOGGARTH

University of Victoria arts graduate Bill Hoggarth, 3238 Eldon Place, leaves Vancouver Friday to take a teaching position in India under the auspices of the Canadian University Service Overseas.

He is one of 18 Canadian university students whose departure to India was delayed in September because of the border dispute with Kashmir.

★ ★ ★

At that time the volunteers underwent an intensive two-week orientation program.

CUSO, the Canadian counterpart of the American Peace Corps, each year takes applications from qualified persons for appointments overseas.

Earlier this year four University of Victoria students were sent to Africa to teaching posts.

★ ★ ★

Dr. John Ogelsby of the University of Victoria, who accepts applications on behalf of CUSO, said the students' letters home so far are "very encouraging."

Dr. Ogelsby pointed out that CUSO volunteers need not be university graduates, but they must be trained or skilled in some profession.

★ ★ ★

He said volunteers must either be single or married without children.

In the case of a married couple both the man and wife must be trained.

Canada pays the travelling costs of the volunteers and they are then paid by the host country on a similar scale to what a person in that country would receive.

Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Coxworth, 2608 Dunlevy Street, announce the forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Carole Ann, to Mr. Terry Jay Higgins, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jay Higgins of Parksville. The ceremony will take place on Saturday, November 20, in St. Aidan's United Church. (Chevron's Studio)

SHOPPING GUIDE

Strangling Yourself With Daily Chores?

By Penny Saver

Housekeeping is definitely my pet peeve. For one thing, there are too many things to think about when it comes to cleaning anything. For example, if you spill something on a rug, what kind of stain remover do you use to wash out that specific substance? What better way is there to clean silverware other than endless scrubbing with a leading silver polish? How am I going to go to that afternoon bridge game at the neighbor's, and still have my house looking as if I spent all day cleaning it?

The answers to all these constant problems, and many more, are all found in a wonderful book that I found. It's the "I Hate to Housekeep Book," selling in the paperback form in one shop for 50 cents. The author, as you can guess by the title, chose a very light, humorous way of treating the dreadful subject. It's a terrific item to put in any Mom's Christmas stocking.

For the younger set, this store has a wide selection of hard-cover books. The ones that I have in mind are beautifully illustrated books of fairy tales, myths and legends.

Some of the titles that I saw were Oscar Wilde's "Young King"; "The Lion and the Carpenter and Other Tales from the Arabian Knights," and "King of the Golden River." All of these books have an introduction by well-known authors such as Pearl Buck, and sell at $1.29. "Pegasus," also colorfully illustrated, is offered in this shop for $1.98 . . . perfect gift ideas for the youngsters on your list.

Do you have the same problem that I do trying to find something to hang on a bare wall, or to hide a crack? Why not purchase an excellent print, selling in this store for $1.69 each?

Whether your taste in art is for the old masters or the moderns, this shop has the print to suit your whim. "Whistler's Mother" and "Mona Lisa" are but two of the great paintings that you have to choose from.

Want to know how Penny was restored to happiness in her housekeeping role? Give her a call at 382-3131.

DEAR ABBY . . .

He Asked for It!

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My wife died leaving me with a small daughter to raise. She is now 16 and wants to spend nights and weekends with her girl friend. I have never met the girl friend's parents, nor have they ever called and asked my permission to allow my daughter to stay with them. As a matter of fact, I have never even met the girl friend. On the basis of these facts I have refused to allow my daughter to spend the night with her friend. I do not wish to restrict the child unfairly, but I feel that staying out all night is a serious step, and I am fearful. My daughter says that I am much too strict. Please give me a woman's viewpoint.

WORRIED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: A woman's viewpoint is no different from a man's. The common concern is for the child's welfare. Do not permit your daughter to spend a night away from home unless you not only have MET the girl and her parents, but are reasonably certain your daughter will have the security and supervision she has at home. P.S.: And I am not being unduly protective because the child is a girl. I would require the same of a boy.

DEAR ABBY: My husband, who is in his 40s, is getting bald. I would like him to get a hair piece but he won't even consider it. I don't like to say much about it because I wouldn't want him to think I don't love him the way he is. I do, but I could love him just that much more if he had more hair. I think he'd look so much nicer, and younger, too. I also think it would help him in his work as he is in sales.

I don't know why men balk at the idea of a hair piece, Abby. We women do so much to help our appearances along. To me it's no different than buying false teeth if your own fall out. Please say something in favor of hair pieces. He reads your column.

ARNIE'S WIFE.

DEAR WIFE: I'm in favor of promoting love, so tell your man that hair is definitely "in" and to try a hair piece just to please you. Go with him and make sure he gets a good one. But don't blame me if he looks so young and attractive that you have trouble holding him.

DEAR ABBY: Perhaps the woman, who complained that her "unclean" husband got the pillow cases so dirty she had to tear them up for rags, would like to trade hers for my "immaculate" specimen. My husband spends an hour in the shower, and 15 minutes scrubbing his fingernails. You would think he was a surgeon preparing for major surgery. But, I wish there were some way to scrub his mind! This man has the filthiest, most vulgar mouth of anyone I have ever known—even in front of his children. (His rotten jokes have been their sex education). He twists everything that is said to give it a dirty meaning. Four-letter words are a part of his everyday conversation. He doesn't take criticism very well so I've given up trying to change him. Perhaps I am the one who is odd. Am I?

"ODD BALL."

DEAR ODD BALL: People who are preoccupied with sex, and make a dirty joke of it, have some serious deep-rooted problems, invariably related to sex. Your husband is a classic example of a four-letter word—"S-I-C-K."

Confidential to M. W.: Don't feel guilty. There are really no "good losers." Just good actors.

Troubled? Write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. For a personal reply, enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.

For Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding," send 50 cents to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif.

This simple but descriptive creation by Montreal artist Eva Prager has been added to the Unitarian Service Committee's selection of Christmas cards this year. It bears the inside inscription, "A contribution to feed hungry children in Asia has been made to the Unitarian Service Committee in your name by.....with best wishes for the holiday season and the coming year."

Greet Friends and Help Starving Children

CARDS WITH A DOUBLE PURPOSE

Well-organized women are already buying Christmas cards to send to their friends and relatives. Many of them, concerned about the poverty and hunger in Asia, are making their cards serve a double purpose. They're ordering the special ones of the United Service Committee which give greetings to their friends and also enable them to send much-needed food to those children who otherwise would be crying of hunger on Christmas Eve.

Last year, a poignant picture of a little girl, drawn by Montreal artist Eva Prager decorated the front of the cards. Such was the success of this nationwide push to alleviate hunger, that a second design has been added.

Here's how the project works. Instead of spending unnecessary money and time shopping for Christmas surprise for your family and friends, you slip the amount you want to spend on this far-reaching gift and address it to: Unitarian Service Committee of Canada, 56 Sparks Street, Ottawa 4, Ont.

The minimum contribution for each recipient is $1. Names and addresses of those to receive the cards should also be enclosed.

Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, executive director of USC tells of some of her experiences during her recent visit to Korea, one of the areas in which Canadian dollars have helped stave off hunger.

"Statistics are too cold to tell of the human tragedies that lie between the facts but I wish I could take you to Namboo Hospital in Seoul and show you the attempted suicide cases, 50 or more a month, with the figures steadily increasing, especially among the young. I wish you could see the feeding stations which cater to the unemployed, the unemployables, the old, the sick, the disabled, where people stand in tight lines gulping down their food, grateful for each single grain . . .

"As always, the worst hit are the children. Forty-two per cent of Korea's population is under the age of 15—a frightening realization. Who is giving them the necessary education and training now, and will provide employment when they grow up? I am haunted by the empty, infinitely sad eyes of those teen-age boys and girls who came to our "welcome back" party at the Mokpo Hospital to celebrate our third anniversary. It is true that we had cured their lungs and bones of tuberculosis, but for what kind of present and what kind of future? Long shall I remember the 14 little half-naked boys huddled together in a tight group at the Children's Reception Centre in Seoul, terrified because they had just been caught by the police in the streets of the capital, lost and roaming about, abandoned by their parents who could no longer care for them . . .

"Slowly, very slowly indeed, conditions are getting a little better in Korea. But Korea is the poorest country in the temperate zone of the globe and has the highest tuberculosis rate in the world. We have done our work humbly, effectively and in the name of Canada. It is my agony that we cannot do more for lack of funds."

Dr. Hitschmanova also tells of the joy in seeing children and their parents fed from sacks of Canadian grain, many of which were bought from the dollars sent by women who wanted their Christmas cards to bear a very special meaning.

Annual bazaar, Knox Presbyterian Church, Saturday at 2 p.m., at the church, Richmond Rd. Stalls of homecooking, needlework, children's items, candy and plants. Refreshments to be served.

Grandmother's Pearl Necklace For 'Something Old' Talisman

An heirloom pearl necklace was "something old" worn by Alice May Joyce when she became the bride of AB Donald Spencer Duncan, RCN, recently in the Church of St. Andrew, HMCS Naden. The necklace was also "something borrowed" from her grandmother, Mrs. Harriet Joyce.

The full-length skirt of the bride's floor-length peau de soie gown was styled en train. The bodice featured a scallop-edged neckline, outlined with sequins, and lily point sleeves. Her tiered veil of scalloped illusion net misted to her shoulders from a crystal tiara and she carried red sweetheart roses in her bouquet.

Bronze and yellow chrysanthemums were at the altar of the church when Rev. H. Hare heard vows exchanged between the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. Joyce, 1828 Dunnett Crescent, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Duncan, 791 Delamere Road.

"Praise My Soul, the King of Heaven" was played by organist Mrs. F. Allen as the bride entered the church on the arm of her father.

Matron of honor, Mrs. D. L. Atcheson and bridesmaids, the Misses Lorraine Rice and Mary Joyce were in matching gowns of apricot and yellow crystal charm, complemented with self-fabric headpiece and bouquets of bronze and yellow chrysanthemums.

Best man was AB Robert Steele, RCN. Ushering guests were Rod McDonald and Lawrence Joyce.

James Joyce proposed the toast to his niece at the reception following in the Club Soho. The three-tier wedding cake which centred the head table was decorated in a yellow and apricot theme.

The couple will make their home at 1184 Esquimalt Road following a honeymoon trip to Washington. The new Mrs. Duncan chose an emerald green coat ensemble, with beige accessories and corsage of sweetheart roses for travelling.

BAIRD-AYERS VOWS

Gold and Bronze Flowers

Mr. and Mrs. George Ayers travelled from their Falkland, B.C. home to attend the recent wedding of their daughter, Shirley Irene, and Gordon John Baird in Oak Bay United Church. Also here were the groom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Baird of Nanaimo.

Chrysanthemums in gold and bronze tones were at the altar of the church for the candlelight service at which Rev. A. Calder officiated.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a gown of French chiffon velvet, styled with a bell-shaped skirt en train. The bodice featured a high neckline and sleeves ending in lily points. Her bouffant veil misted to shoulder-length from a wedding-ring headpiece of lace, appliqued with rhinestones and pearls, and she carried Johanna Hill roses in her cascade bouquet.

KELLY GREEN

Identical gowns of Kelly green peau de soie were worn by matron of honor, Mrs. Robert Preston; bridesmatron, Mrs. George Webb and bridesmaid, Miss Wendy Sugden. Gold and bronze chrysanthemums. were in their bouquets. Flowergirl Lori Hungar, Kamloops, was in a frock of pale green peau de soie and she carried a basket of gold and bronze chrysanthemums. All wore matching pillbox headpieces and black Alaska diamond pendants, gifts of the bride.

George Webb was best man. Ushering guests to pews marked with satin bows were Robert Honeyman, and Thomas Russell of Nanaimo.

Baskets of white and gold chrysanthemums, yellow roses and candelabra surrounded the four-tier wedding cake which centred the bride's table at the reception following in Holyrood House. Johanna Hill roses in a bronze vase topped the cake. Robert Preston proposed the toast to the bride.

The couple will make their home at 1918 Lulie Street following a honeymoon trip to Vancouver and the Okanagan Valley. The new Mrs. Baird chose a gold suit accented with chocolate brown accessories and gardenias en corsage for travelling.

Highlight of French Lace Trims Peau de Soie Gown

"O Promise Me" was sung by soloist Mr. D. Ritchie, accompanied by Mrs. W. H. Gregory at the organ, at the recent ceremony uniting Donna Elizabeth Cain and Richard Thomas Gale.

First United Church was decorated with arrangements of chrysanthemums in gold and white tones when Rev. R. D. Morris heard vows exchanged between the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Cain, 1113 Esquimalt Road, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Mulcahy, 4062 Grange Road.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a floor-length gown of white peau de soie styled along empire lines. The bodice was of French lace and featured three-quarter-length sleeves. A train extended from the A-line skirt. Her bouffant veil misted to shoulder length from a self-fabric rose headpiece. A single strand of pearls and a pearl ring, gift of the groom, was her only jewelry. She carried a bouquet of red roses and feathered white carnations.

Matron of honor Mrs. R. West and bridesmaids the Misses Linda and Patricia Harbinson of Edmonton were in gowns of turquoise peau de soie, styled with bell-shaped skirts. The bodices featured scoop necklines and elbow-length sleeves. The dresses were made by the bride's mother. They wore floral headpieces and carried bouquets of bronze chrysanthemums.

Keith Bosher was best man, and guests were ushered to pews marked with white ribbons and chrysanthemums by Frank Gibbins and Hikke Isomaa.

The bride's table was centred with a three-tier wedding cake decorated by Mrs. J. Roger, which was flanked with yellow rosebuds, at the reception in the Club Soho. Mr. E. J. Harbinson of Edmonton proposed the toast to his niece.

For travelling on honeymoon to the mainland, the bride wore a camel and grey tweed suit with camel hat and gloves.

possible candidates. He is the winner of a hard-fought personal fight in his constituency; he has a power base in both Ontario and Quebec. He is also the most colorful campaigner the Tories have, next to John Diefenbaker. Davie Fulton, now also back in the contest, has the backing of more intellectually - inclined Conservatives, but lacks a firm power base outside his home province.

John Robarts and Duff Roblin are caught in the uncomfortable position of not being able to contest a leadership convention without giving up their provincial premierships —a move that might be worthwhile to take over a federal party in power, but hardly to take a long chance on becoming the leader of a parliamentary opposition.

At this moment it looks as if the next election campaign could turn into something of a male beauty contest, with George Hees and Bob Winters matching profiles for the prime ministership of Canada.

DIEFENBAKER

election outcome is an answer once and for all to the self-appointed pundits that can feel the public pulse."

In good spirits, Mr. Diefenbaker said a pre-election poll that forecast a 15-point percentage spread favoring the Liberals over the Conservatives in popular vote was "all wet."

The final spread was less than half that amount.

Mr. Diefenbaker said he is still waiting to "hear what the prime minister has to say" about the election outcome.

Asked how he felt physically, Mr. Diefenbaker said "Wonderful. That's not an assumed attitude either. I feel wonderful."

Mr. Diefenbaker said he hoped to call an early party caucus in Ottawa. "I can't see Parliament (being called) before the second week of January."

. . . NDP

Mr. Douglas also said Canadians want increased old age pensions, increased federal aid for education, a comprehensive manpower training program and protection for consumers.

Mr. Douglas, personally victorious in Burnaby - Coquitlam constituency, said with good legislation a minority Parliament might last four or five years, as the last one could have if the prime minister had not called Monday's "useless and unnecessary" election.

HAPPY WITH INCREASE

The NDP failed to make the gains Mr. Douglas hoped for, but he expressed satisfaction at the party's increased number of Commons seats and its higher percentage of the popular vote.

The NDP is "no longer a splinter party — we are now a major factor in the Canadian political scene."

He was disappointed at failing to break into the Atlantic provinces, and at the defeat of Robert Cliche, his Quebec leader, in his bid to win Beauce riding.

"The first thing that has to be decided in Canada is whether the prime minister is going to resign or whether he's going to carry on," he said.

He added that he was referring to a possible resignation of the government, not the prime minister himself.

If Mr. Pearson decides to carry on, he should draw up a program for Parliament and try to win approval from opposition parties.

Mr. Douglas said the election had changed nothing, except that the prime minister's "predicament now is slightly worse" and two months have been lost on parliamentary business.

A nominal one-day sentence was imposed Monday in central magistrate's court on Mrs. Ron Thody, 1244 May, who earlier pleaded guilty to writing a worthless cheque in payment for groceries. Mrs. Thody was also placed on bond to be of good behaviour for six months.

Alberni Vandals Go Wild

PORT ALBERNI — A wave of weekend window smashing swept through the Alberni Valley.

Port Alberni RCMP are investigating broken windows at Salvation Army Thrift Shop, George L. Thompson Realty, ABC Confectionery, Woodward's garage and Kingdom Hall.

RCMP in Alberni are searching for vandals responsible for smashing several windows at Allen's Super Service.

★ ★ ★

Two Vancouver Island women who arrived in Halifax two weeks ago to complete a cross-Canada horseback trip have run out of money.

We're broke . . . we haven't any money to get us home," said Helen Alwood, 29, of Port Alberni in an interview Monday.

Miss Alwood and Joyce Myhon, 33, of Prince George now are living with relatives in nearby Dartmouth after being featured at the Atlantic Winter Fair here last week.

"We've had about 400 offers from people wanting to buy our horses," Miss Alwood said, "but not one showed up with any money."

Trustee Bob Kelly is advocating construction of a bathhouse and changehouse on the one-acre tract.

The service club has constructed a Kin Hut and provided recreational facilities for chilren.

The park is owned by the highways department and is on a 20-year lease to the Kinsmen.

The club has not made a decision so far.

Rate Revision Negotiations Stalemated

DUNCAN — Bickering over a rate revision dispute between union and management is treatening a tie-up of te coastal forest industry.

International Woodworkers of America official Weldon Jubenville said Monday negotiations in 30 job categories have broken off.

But tis as been denied by Forest Industrial Relations officer John Billings. He claims negotiations have made "substantial progress."

Rate revision is involved in job changes when a man is doing a new job but is getting paid at the rate of pay of the last union-management agreement.

NO SLOWDOWN

"Mr. Billings refused to continue negotiations on revisions until such time as the IWA would guarantee there would be no threats, no slowdown and no work stoppage," said Mr. Jubenville.

The industrial relations officer has also demanded use of the union's entire resources—including the strike fund—to see these conditions carried out, added the IWA official.

Said Mr. Billings: "The allegations of Mr. Jubenville are completely unfounded."

And there have been signs of job action—slow-down in work, refusal to perform normal duties—in recent weeks to force increase for jobs for which no rate revision was provided in the 1964 contract, he said.

World Problems Stressed in U.K.

By PATRICK HARDEN

LONDON (UPI)—Queen Elizabeth today opened a new session of Parliament in a colorful ritual unchanged since the days of the Norman kings of England. She pledged Britain's "unremitting efforts" to solve critical problems of the 20th century.

Mustering her prestige as head of the British Commonwealth, the monarch called for a peaceful solution to the Rhodesian independence crisis and pledged her government's continued determination to arrange Viet Nam peace talks.

The Queen's formal speech, prepared by Labor Prime Minister Harold Wilson, highlighted the glittering state opening of Parliament. It touched on Britain's troubles at home and abroad. The only surprise was the omission of any mention of the government's immediate plans on nationalization of the steel industry.

JOINT MEETING

The monarch addressed a joint meeting of lords and commoners from her throne in the centuries-old upper chamber, where she arrived shortly before noon after a state procession through the streets of London.

The old parliament closed only Monday, receiving six bills, two of which when passed into law abolished the 700-year old death penalty in Britain and prohibited racial discrimination and incitement to racial hatred.

The new session will remain in session until October, 1966—or until Wilson calls a new election. The prime minister today had only a one-vote majority in the House of Commons because of two deaths in the ranks of Labor party ministers.

A byelection Thursday is expected to result in an easy Labor party victory but a second byelection—at a date still to be set—is considered a toss-up.

Prince Philip sat below the throne for today's ceremonies, his rank reduced to that of spectator. Heralds in costumes of an age long past backed the dais. Members of the Royal household—women in flowing gowns and tiaras, men in uniform or knee britches—stood respectfully to one side.

In the well of the chamber sat black-and-red-robed judges of the realm, observing the Queen from beneath full-bottomed wigs. On side benches were the Lords, jammed into the chamber like subway commuters.

BLACK JACKETS

Members of the House of Commons stood in black jackets and pin-striped trousers in the rear of the chamber. The Queen received her brief speech from the Lord High Chancellor, kneeling before the throne.

The monarch read the speech and, in 10 minutes, the royal spectacular of the year was over.

ITALIAN PREMIER Aldo Moro arrived in Belgrade Monday for a four-day visit to Yugoslavia—the first by an Italian premier since Yugoslavia was created 50 years ago. The visit was designed to strengthen the friendship between the two neighboring countries.

INVESTIGATION ORDERED

Justice Slams Prisoner Treatment

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Supreme Court Justice N. T. Nemetz of Vancouver sharply criticized RCMP and ordered a report on charges of ill-treatment of assize court prisoners here Monday.

Defence counsels lodged two different complaints of ill-treatment of clients at the fall assizes.

"I am distressed by the lack of consideration given prisoners since the opening of these assizes," Mr. Nemetz said.

"I don't know who is to blame but I want Crown and defence counsels to bring me a report on the situation."

John Steeves, counsel for Anto Loos who was acquitted on a charge of rape Monday, said his client was not given an opportunity to wash or shave all day Friday and was not given lunch.

F. W. Elliot, defence counsel for Henry Fitzgerald who was convicted of manslaughter Friday, said his client was also mistreated.

Elliot said Fitzgerald was "thrown into the drunk tank" and "had to sleep on boards with no blankets."

Mr. Nemetz ordered the provincial jail to take assize court prisoners at any time. Prisoners were previously taken to city jail if it was after 4 p.m.

Inspector T. S. MacArthur, head of RCMP in the Prince George subdivision, said he had heard nothing of the charges.

"I don't believe it," he said. "Our prisoner accommodation here is by no stretch of the imagination satisfactory but there is no reason why a man should go without lunch."

Inspector MacArthur promised an investigation into the charges.

35 KILLED BY TIGERS

NEW DELHI (UPI)—Three man-eating tigers have killed 35 persons near Bareilly, according to reports reaching here today.

They said the tigers have created panic in the Naini Tal district and the Kicha and Rudrapur areas. Three East Pakistani refugees in a transit camp at Rudrapur were reported among the victims.

Philippines Vote Marked By Violence

MANILA (UPI) — An estimated eight million Filipinos voted today in a presidential election marred by terrorism and death. At least five persons were killed in election day violence.

A town mayor and a former police chief in Ilocos Norte province fought a western style gun duel today and killed each other. Three other persons died in other incidents. The deaths raised to 47 the number of persons killed in the long and bitter campaign.

Returns began trickling in shortly after the polls closed at 6 p.m. (5 a.m. EST).

Partial unofficial returns from two Manila precincts gave senate president Perdinand E. Marcos 42 votes and incumbent President Diosdado Macapagal 11.

Reports from southern Cebu province said a Liberal party campaign worker was killed early today when he was jumped by Nationalista Party partisans.

Businessmen Divided Over Result

TORONTO (CP) — Humphrey B. Style, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said today Monday's election giving Canada another minority government "is not necessarily a bad thing."

He said in a statement that a government leader "who has to look over his shoulder every so often to make sure he is being followed is inclined to pick his way with a bit more care."

The record of the last Parliament, where the legislation passed was the consensus of all parties in Ottawa, bears this out, he said.

A similar statement came from Ron Todgham, president of Chrysler Canada Ltd. and the Automobile Manufacturers' Association.

He agreed the previous minority government had worked satisfactorily.

J. T. Manley, president of the Canadian Importers Association, also agreed, but said Parliament now should get down to business and forget about elections.

Other business leaders weren't so happy.

Lt. - Gen. Howard Graham, president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, said he believes a minority situation makes for a weak administration.

Harry Gassard, managing director of the Investment Dealers Association of Canada, also expressed regret about the lack of a clear majority, but added that getting the election over with is a relief to most businessmen.

LINER SOLD FOR SCRAP

LONDON (Reuters) — The 26-year-old, 36,000-ton Cunard liner Mauretania has been sold for scrap, it was announced here Monday night.

The liner, which arrived at Southampton Wednesday after a Mediterranean cruise has been bought by the Thomas Ward Steel Company of Sheffield for an undisclosed price and will be broken up on the Firth of Forth, Scotland.

The Mauretania saw service as a Second World War troopship after making her maiden voyage from Liverpool in 1939.

MENU Magic from the TEST KITCHEN

Luncheon Treat

Hot sandwiches are more inviting than cold ones this time of year . . . and they're almost as easy to fix. Here's one combining a 7-ounce can tuna fish with ½ cup shredded Canadian Cheddar Cheese and just enough mayonnaise to moisten. Spread on buttered hamburg rolls, top with a tomato slice and sprinkle with additional shredded cheese. Broil until bubbly and serve with tall glasses of cold milk.

More Milk

Here's a delicious way to get extra milk into the breakfast menu. Serve any of those ready-to-eat cereals the youngsters love, with milk sweetened with maple syrup. For an added treat top the cereal with fresh apple sauce as well.

Dinner Special

Next time you're serving ham in any way shape or form, serve it with glazed apple rings. Melt ¼ cup butter in a heavy frying pan and stir in 1 cup of lightly-packed brown sugar. When bubbly, add apple rings and cook over very low heat until just tender. Large tart cooking apples are best for this and keep the apple rings fairly thick.

Holiday Preview

As a special treat some night soon, serve festive ice cream. Start with 1 quart of vanilla ice cream, softened slightly with an electric mixer. Then fold in ¾ cup each of well-drained mincemeat and cranberry sauce. Freeze until firm. That's all there is to it!

Deluxe Apple Pie

Sneak some peanut butter into the next apple pie you bake and just listen to the applause. Combine ½ cup lightly-packed brown sugar and 1 cup all-purpose flour. Cut in finely ⅓ cup chilled butter then mix in ¼ cup peanut butter. Sprinkle this crumbly mixture over an unbaked open-face apple pie, then bake as usual. MMM . . . good with ice cream too!

Pineapple Cabbage Toss

Coleslaw enthusiasts take note of this new dressing: Blend together 3 tablespoons vinegar, ½ teaspoon salt, a few grains pepper, 1½ tablespoons sugar and ¼ teaspoon dry mustard. Stirring constantly, gradually add this mixture to 6 tablespoons evaporated milk. Chill and toss with 2 cups shredded cabbage and ¾ cup well-drained crushed pineapple.

NDP Holds Upper Island Ridings

By TERRY IZZARD

Vancouver Island's terrible-twins lived up to their reputations Monday night.

NDP incumbents Colin Cameron (Nanaimo - Cowichan-The Islands) and Tom Barnett (Comox-Alberni) simply picked up where they left off.

From the first poll the two veteran politician leaped ahead in the vote-catchers race.

As returns trickled in from the two wide-spread ridings, there was never any doubt as to who would be victors.

By the hundred and then by the thousand, Mr. Cameron and Mr. Barnett forged ahead of the nearest competitor—in each case the Liberal candidate.

Though miles apart—the one in Nanaimo, the other in Port Alberni — they tied neck and neck during the first part of the race.

TWIN TOTALS

When the wires stopped humming late Monday night Mr. Cameron had 12,065 votes while Mr. Barnett's tally was a similar 12,059.

Long before this total was reached, rival candidates had conceded victory in face of such heavy odds.

About 90 minutes after the last polling booth closed, both members had won.

Said Mr. Cameron, participating in his sixth federal election—five successfully: "It couldn't have been better. The voters have really shown who they can count on."

Looking toward the next session at Ottawa, Mr. Cameron said: "I've got 10,000 personal belly-aches, both on the national scene and locally."

Backing him up will be Mr. Barnett, whose comment on the election was: "I wouldn't think Mr. Pearson will call another one in a hurry.

'BENNETT RESIGN'

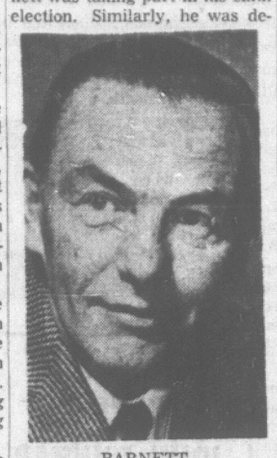
"When the results appeared, it crossed my mind that the premier (Mr. Bennett) might want to retire now."

All set to settle down to the daily routine, Mr. Barnett said he will press for Canadian fishing rights on B.C.'s west coast.

He was referring to recent complaints of Russian trawlers hampering local trawlers in Queen Charlotte Sound and making off with much of the fish catch.

"I'd like to see a base line established from the northern tip of Vancouver Island to the westernmost tip of the Queen Charlottes," said Mr. Barnett. "This would mean excluding both Japanese and U.S. fishing fleets."

He is also determined to try to settle grievances of B.C.'s Indians on the question of land rights.



BARNETT

Like Mr. Cameron, Mr. Barnett was taking part in his sixth election. Similarly, he was defeated in 1958 by the Conservative candidate.

BLAME BENNETT

While the NDP pair had no worries, the second place Liberal men were busy analysing just what went wrong.

Voting whims aside, Douglas Greer (Nanaimo, Cowichan the Islands) placed the blame for lost votes squarely on Premier Bennett's shoulders.

"The voters we would have got went to Social Credit as a result of Mr. Bennett's anti-Liberal campaign," he said.

Mr. Greer's Monday night tally was almost half that of the winning candidate.

Comox-Alberni Liberal candidate Loran Jordan — whose returns were almost identical —summed it up as:

"A protest vote all down the line. I'm disappointed, but that's what the people want."

He summed up the situation: "We're right back where we were before. I don't think it's good for the country. But that's the way it is."

His reaction to the suggestion that perhaps Mr. Pearson is now ready to resign was: "I think he'd be crazy to resign now. He might as well see it through."

NEXT ELECTION

None of the candidates was willing to comment on whether or not another election might be called some time in the near future.

On the basis of Monday night's polling returns none of the other candidates in either riding was in the running.

They were: Comox-Alberni —(Social Credit) 4,145; William MacAdam (Progressive Conservative) 3,940 and Alex McKenzie (Independent) 837.

Nanaimo, Cowichan, the Islands—W. F. Matthews (Cons.) 4,775, and Lyle Wilkinson (Social Credit) 3,740.

VICTORIOUS New Democratic Party candidate Colin Cameron is lifted high by supporters in Nanaimo after being re-elected member for Nanaimo-Cowichan The Islands. He had solid margin of victory.

'Confusion' Blamed On Official

DUNCAN — Federal returning officer Fred Spencer today was blamed for an alleged day of confusion Monday at local polling stations.

He was criticized by Liberal organizer George Whittaker. His and other party headquarters were inundated with phone calls from people who didn't know where to cast ballots.

"There was insufficient public advertising and notice," complained NDP campaigner John Cannon.

"Mr. Spencer acted as if everything centred on Nanaimo and the result was a miscarriage of his duties," added local newspaper editor Will Dobson.

Party officials here advocated one central polling station at Duncan armories as in past years.

Youth 'Needs Discipline,' Gets 8 Months

A 17-year-old youth was sent to jail Monday for eight months when sentenced on eight charges of false pretences.

William Mack, 439 Kipling, was told by Magistrate William Ostler that "there is good in you. If it is going to be saved, you will need training, guidance and discipline."

Magistrate Ostler concluded that eight months in the Young Offenders' Unit would set him on the right path.

Dermon Owen-Flood, Mack's defence counsel, had asked that Mack be released to the supervision of his step-father who had promised to take the youth into his business.

Magistrate Ostler told Mack, who had committed some of the offenses while on probation, that he could not "accede to the eloquent plea of your learned counsel" and passed sentence on the young man.

Simmons; honorary assistant regional commissioner for Rover Scout special events, Donal Hamer; regional scoutmaster, A. E. Yates.

Liberals Win Mock Election

A minority Liberal government was elected Monday in a mock election at Milne's Landing High School in Sooke.

Constituencies were formed in each division of students in the school.

Liberals captured eight seats, NDP five; Conservatives and Socreds two each and independents one.

Students at the school heard campaign speeches by Esquimalt-Saanich candidates George Chatterton, James Gorst, J. L. Bereton and Mrs. Vera Pipes before their election.

This tobacco seedling hopes to grow to be a Sportsman Cigarette

From this tiny seedling, nestling in the palm of a grower's hand, will come the best-tasting tobacco under the sun.

We grow these tender little plants from blue ribbon seed—the very best. And then we baby the plants along in good, rich soil with plenty of warm sunshine and cool summer rain. This is proud tobacco. As it grows strong and tall through the long, lazy days, it ripens into the best-tasting tobacco under the sun.

This is Sportsman tobacco. Gifted with real tobacco taste. Yours to enjoy in Sportsman King Size Filter Cigarettes.

CBS Wins Battle In Rasputin Show

NEW YORK (UPI)—A state supreme court jury today found that the Columbia Broadcasting System was within its rights in dramatizing the 1916 assassination of Rasputin for television even though the assassin is still alive.

In effect, the jury upheld the concept that events of general historical significance are in the public domain and may be subjected to literary and dramatic treatment despite the objection of those who took part in them.

CBS was sued for $1.5 million by Rasputin's slayer, Prince Felix Youssoupoff, 79, who charged that the television drama was made without his consent and was inaccurate. In addition to claiming invasion of privacy, he complained that the film suggested that he had panedered his beautiful 21-year-old wife to lure the lecherous monk to his death.

Neither the Czarist nobleman nor his royal wife, Princess Irina Romanoff Youssoupoff, were present when Mrs. Patricia James, foreman of the jury of nine men and three women, announced the verdict after and hour of deliberation interrupted by lunch. The Youssoupoffs had both testified during the four-week trial.

Andy Stephen Looks at TV

"We don't think we'll ever know, without a shadow of a doubt, what triggered this accident."

The remark was made Sunday during the 55-minute CBC-TV program, Document. The first program of this season presented a report on the investigation into Canada's worst air disaster, the tragedy of TCA Flight 831 in November, 1963.

Stephen

On the 29th of that November night, a DC-8 jet aircraft with 118 persons on board crashed on a flight from Montreal to Toronto with loss of life of all the occupants.

A two-year investigation into the cause of the crash resulted in release of the Challies Report in June of this year.

Writer - producer - director Jim Carney attempted, through a series of flashbacks of the crash scene and moments of inquiry, to pour attention on the investigation.

He succeeded in weaving an interesting though technically-loaded yarn. Because it was tough to avoid the technical aspect, it tended to drag as the layman viewer tried to understand the jargon.

Carney, a former Victoria radio station employee who saw television's future and moved on in the mid-50's, managed to introduce some gimmicks with startling effectiveness.

The stark scene showing the muddy, water-covered crash scene near Ste. Therese and the control tower, both bereft of sound, were typical production techniques which, in this case, worked dramatically.

There must have been thousands of feet of film shot to give the editors as much scope as possible to piece together a comprehensive report.

Perhaps more could have been done to present it in even a simpler form. It seemed that compressing the two years into a 55-minute period was a bit much for the scissor-wielders, though all concerned deserve an 'A' for effort.

★ ★ ★

SHORT CIRCUIT: CBC radio presents a Fred Allen Special, Sunday, Nov. 14, at 5 p.m. The program will feature comedy classics from the heyday of U.S. network radio, the 1930's and '40's. Edgar Bergen and Charlie McCarthy will host the 55-minute salute to comedian Allen with recorded highlights from many of Allen's best comedy broadcasts, including skits from the famous Allen's Alley segments.

Allen's sallies are famous. Typical are these:

On conferences: "A conference is a gathering of important people who singly can do nothing but together can decide that nothing can be done."

On nightclubs: "I can get better air in a closet. I can cook better food myself. I can hear better music on a portable phonograph. And I can meet a better class of people in the subway."

On himself: "I am the only man who can cut his throat with his tongue."

LIBERALS STUDY LEADER ISSUE

By PETER REGENSTREIF

Most of the discussion surrounding the calling of Monday's election by Prime Minister Pearson in early September has dealt with the pros and cons of majority government.

It has been widely assumed, depending on the political disposition of the observer, that the government wanted the election for any number of reasons: to escape the necessity of facing further criticism in the House from a minority position; to be able to get unpopular things done; to avoid the minor party pressure on legislation; or, simply, in order to renew its mandate.

Furthermore, or so went the speculation, the Liberals thought it was a fortuitous time to have an election in view of the low popular standing of Conservative leader John Diefenbaker. Throughout the campaign, to say nothing of the 2½ years preceeding it, the focus has been on the problems of the Conservative party with regard to this crucial question of leadership.

Own Problems

These suppositions make sense. Taken by themselves they may even have provided sufficient motivation for the Liberals to have called an election. I doubt it.

All the attention given to the trials and tribulations of John Diefenbaker has obscured the fact that the Liberal party has leadership problems of its own.

The election was called to ensure as much as possible the orderly succession to "Mike" Pearson.

Examine the basic political conditions of 1965: The prime minister's public appeal was rather weak, so weak in fact that had the Conservatives managed to change their leader, they might easily have taken the measure of the Liberals under Pearson. In a minority position in the House, the government would have been badly exposed had it attempted to change horses, particularly during the period just prior to the customary leadership convention.

No Successor

Finally, and most significantly, there is no obvious successor to the mantle. Quebec Premier Jean Lesage, Defence Minister Paul Hellyer, Labor Minister Allan MacEachen and Trade and Commerce Minister Mitchell Sharp are leading contenders with Forestry Minister Maurice Sauve, Montreal MP John Turner and, now, Robert Winters being mentioned too.

For the Liberals, this is a serious departure from the norm. They deplore a knock-down drag-out public battle for the leadership.

The Liberal style since 1919 and the only real contest in the history of the selection of the party leader, is to settle the matter behind closed doors and to use the convention as a unifying device.

Change Chiefs

If possible, the question of leadership is probably of greater importance to the Grits than to the Tories who change their leaders with virtually every loss of an election. The Conservatives have had 14 leaders since Confederation; the Liberals, 6.

Even if the Liberals did not obtain a majority, the calling of an election would still buy them precious time because no one in the opposition would dare force them to the country after this last campaign for at least a couple of years.

If nothing else, this period would serve to provide the Liberals with the opportunity to settle on an heir-apparent and for a consensus to be crystallized.

This was the time-table: A Pearson victory in the fall of 1965 to give Jean Lesage the chance to consolidate his government's mandate in his province in 1966 and to be in position to leave Quebec should that be necessary; no overt party politics during the centennial year; the convention in 1968; and an election to confirm the new leader with the electorate in 1969.

Unseemly Fight

Just in case an obvious successor does not emerge, the Liberals could have afforded a wild, and for them unseemly, scuffle for the leadership if they had a majority screen behind which to hide.

Furthermore, a majority would be especially valuable should a segment of the party become sufficiently disaffected over the eventual choice of the convention. In such circumstances, a strong position in the House would prevent the dissidents from trying to exercise a veto over the party by threatening to abstain or even oppose the government in a close situation.

All very neat.

Before anyone lets out with the howl that once again the Liberals were placing the needs of party before country, a word in their defence is in order.

Political Axiom

It is an axiom of politics that in a crisis, what often holds a political system together is a party which can bridge key social, regional and economic cleavages and thus prevent total disruption.

There are firm grounds for claiming that what contributed to bringing on the Civil War in the United States 100 years ago far more than anything else was the failure of any party to adequately combine north and south in some sort of coalition, however uneasy.

Given the political situation in Canada today, the Liberal party is the only one of the two major parties which can command major support in both Quebec and in English-Canada. The chasm between French and English is the historic problem for this country and, in this century, the Liberals have been the ones to bridge it.

Quebec Issue

It is true that their performance on the Prairies is poor but this is relatively momentary and can be rectified by changes in personnel and in program. Quebec is more serious.

Should the Liberal party be turned into a facade behind which factional strife is the rule rather than the exception, it is entirely possible that this would leave Quebec with no federal political home. The consequences are apparent.

Above all, the Quebecois must be made to feel that should the Liberal "custom" of alternating between French and English leaders be terminated this time—as is likely to be the case—the decision was reached only after every opportunity was given for a French-Canadian chieftain to emerge.

In short, an attempt to strengthen his party may sometimes be the most important factor in a prime minister's decision. But it does not always rest on purely partisan considerations.

In this instance, it is not difficult for the Liberals to make the case that party interest and national interest coincide.

Vancouver Gets AAU Indoor Meet

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 1966 Canadian track and field championships have been awarded to Edmonton.

The Edmonton championships will be combined with the track and field trials for the Canadian British Empire Games team.

The Amateur Athletic Union of Canada also approved at its annual meeting here the staging for the first time of a Canadian indoor track and field championship. It will be held here Feb. 15.

Lady Pro Golfers To Visit Canada

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The Ladies' Professional Golf Association of America will include London in its regular tour next summer, first time a Canadian centre has been included in the event.

Spokesmen for the group and its London sponsor announced that the tournament will be held at Sunningdale Country Club July 28-30, and will open the way for a Canadian stop to become an annual event.

Leonard Wirtz, tournament director for the association, said:

"We're not looking for another tournament in Canada, but we do hope this will become an annual stop on the tour. Since making the decision to come to London, we've had 10 requests to fill this date on the tour."

Bombers in Running For Collegiate Ace

BOSTON (AP) — The pro football bidding is under way for Bob Cappadona with three teams including Winnipeg Blue Bombers seeking to sign the 220-pound Northeastern University fullback.

Cappadona, 22, who lives in nearby Watertown, set a Northeastern rushing record of 2,064 yards in three seasons although he was sidelined in the team's final two games this year because of a knee injury.

Cappadona, who transferred closer to home after a freshman year at Notre Dame, was drafted by San Francisco 49ers of the National Football League and by Boston Patriots of the American League. Now the Blue Bombers of the Canadian League want him.

Cappadona disclosed Monday that he was entertained during the weekend by the 49ers and then was a guest at the Patriots' game with Buffalo Sunday. He said he has received an offer from San Francisco and plans to meet with Boston general manager Mike Holovak Wednesday.

"I'll talk with the Blue Bombers after I see Holovak," Cappadona said. "Then I'll weigh the three offers and make my decision."

Cappadona admitted he would prefer to play in Boston.

"We'll make Cappadona an attractive offer," Holovak said.

"I've seen him in a few games and I feel sure he'll make a good pro. He's a fine ball carrier and plays well on defence."

Tory Candidate Blames John D. For His Defeat

TORONTO (CP) — Conservative Fred C. Stinson, who ran a distant third in York Centre in Monday's election, blamed John Diefenbaker for his showing.

"The people in suburban Toronto would not support a candidate running with John Diefenbaker as his leader," he said Monday night. "If George Hees had been leader of the party, we would have swept Toronto."

The Conservatives won none of the 18 Toronto-area seats.

Mr. Stinson, who formerly sat for oYrk Centre, was defeated by Liberal James Walker in 1962 and refused to run in 1963 after a disagreement with Mr. Diefenbaker on defence policy. Mr. Walker retained the seat Monday.

Mr. Walker polled 41,115 this time, an dMr. Stinson with 15,077 ran third behind NDP candidate Val Scott. Mr. Stinson also lost his deposit.

President's Cup To Frank Chapot

WASHINGTON (AP) —Frank Chapot, a veteran member of the U.S. equestrian team, won the coveted President's Cup Monday night with the 10-year-old chestnut gelding, San Lucas, in the feature event of the Washington international horse show.

The 33-year-old Chapot, with a clean ride against two others in a jumpoff, received the big cup from Vice-President Hubert H. Humphrey.

Chapot's wife, also on the U.S. team, came in second in the highlight event of the six-day show, riding a French horse, Manon.

NEW GOLF BALL . . . . . . WON'T WEAR OUT

Joy in Dufferville

NEW YORK (NEA)—Anyone who has ever suffered through 18 holes of golf knows that the only thing which wears out faster than a player's patience is his ball.

But providence and science have apparently, and at last, come to the rescue of the average duffer's pocketbook. A new ball has been developed which its manufacturers insist will not cut nor lose its resiliency round after round.

Invented by non-golfer Harry Lander of Trenton, N.J., the ball — named the Long Play—is chemically produced from synthetic rubber by rearranging molecular building blocks.

Simply stated, its mother was a test tube.

But whatever its ancestry, it works—according to Lander. Single balls have lasted hundreds of rounds in tests. It will not crack, peel nor smudge and is impossible to knock off center.

The acid test for the man in the fairway, of course, is to forget his clubs and hit the ball with a hammer or another destructive instrument. Lander insists it survives even this extreme hardship without flaw.

"In fact," he says, "the only way this ball will lose its original value is if the golfer loses it in the woods."

There's a solution to that problem also. A sharp-eyed caddy.

NHL Bid By Baltimore

BALTIMORE (AP)—A formal application was filed Monday for a Baltimore franchise in the National Hockey League.

Baltimore is one of four cities under consideration for the two remaining spots in the proposed 1967 NHL expansion. Four other franchises have been promised conditionally.

The application must be accompanied by a $10,000 fee. Local interests also must show they can provide $2,000,000 for the franchise and 20 hockey players, as well as a $500,000 reserve for working capital.

The NHL has agreed to approve the Baltimore Civic Centre for league play if some changes are made in the seating and lighting.

Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin gave his support to the suggested alterations, which are expected to cost upward of $350,000.

B.C. Buddhists Lauded at Meet

KELOWNA (CP)—An American Buddhist leader told 300 delegates to the British Columbia Young Buddhist League convention here they have a valuable contribution to make to their country and the world.

Rev. Takishi Tsuji of San Francisco, national director of Bureau of Buddhist Education, Buddhist Churches of America, was guest speaker at the 11th annual convention which ended Sunday night.

"The 550,000 Buddhists in the world, proud citizens with a proud faith, have a valuable contribution to make," Mr Tsuji said.

"Buddhism is the perfection of our personality, the cultivation of our spirituality so we can see things in their right perspective. The way in which man can achieve the perfection of mankind.

"U Thant is a devout Buddhist. He has learned the art of humility and of discipline and risen to the highest office in the land, secretary general of the United Nations."

Japanese Hit for Refusal To Move Fishing Line West

SEATTLE (AP) — Gov. William Egan of Alaska said Monday that Japan's refusal to agree to shifting the North Pacific fisheries treaty line farther west is a violation of the pact.

Egan, here for the annual meeting of the International Fisheries Commission, made the statement during a special meeting co-sponsored by the Alaska division of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce and the Association of Pacific Fisheries.

He said the treaty line was set at 175 degrees west longitude on a provisional basis to divide salmon spawned in North America and Asia.

During the commission meeting, Haru Nakai, spokesman for the Japanese delegation, called fish resources in the North Pacific "our common property." He said this year's record runs of Bristol Bay red salmon disprove arguments that fishermen of his nation are depleting stocks.

At the special meeting, Egan took issue with Japan's stand.

"Nothing could be further from the truth," he said. "It should be stated instead that the 1965 run developed in spite of the Japanese high-season salmon fishery."

RETURN RUNS

He said only fortunate circumstances, such as unusually favorable survival conditions, made possible this year's return runs of Bristol Bay salmon.

Egan noted that U.S. fishermen are prohibited from taking salmon with nets on the high seas. He said long experience shows it is impossible to perpetuate salmon stocks if large catches are permitted on the high seas.

He said that since 1955 Japanese ocean nets have taken "at least 126,000,000 red salmon with more than 42,000,000 of them being of Bristol Bay origin."

The line, Egan said, was meant to be subject to relocation if research justified such a move but the Japanese have declined to go along with the idea.

VANCOUVER 'A PARADISE'

VANCOUVER (CP)—Sharp-penned political cartoonist Leslie Illingworth says there's nothing to satirize here—the place is paradise.

"You've got to be against something to caricature it," he said.

"The only thing I feel about Vancouver is envy—you are living in a paradise."

Mr. Illingworth, cartoonist and writer for the Daily Mail in London, is on a tour of Mexico, the United States and Canada.

"This is the first city I've ever seen where I feel as though I can breathe."

He said life here "seems like the sort of life lived by the cream of Europe."

Life on "just enough" income can be a frustrating and dull existence. Yet it's the life led by many people today who live on a limited pension. Extra money from interest and dividends on their few investments can help. But in many cases it's still not enough to really enjoy life. Selling investments for cash is a temporary solution but in the long run it means less income and more money worries.

The answer is an annuity. It scientifically combines interest and capital to provide a guaranteed income for life. It banishes stock market worries. Gives peace of mind. How much income an annuity will provide depends on many factors. Your age, for example, and the kind of annuity you buy. One popular type would give a man age 70 who deposits $10,000, an income of $1,248 a year as long as he lives. For information on an annuity to fit your needs just call the Manufacturers Life representative.

Detached Retina Can Be Refastened

By DR. WALTER ALVEREZ

Unfortunately, quite a few persons, and perhaps especially persons with a marked degree of nearsightedness, will suffer from what is called a detached retina. The retina is the membrane at the back of the eye, which does the seeing. It can separate from the main wall of the eyeball. In such cases, an able ophthamologist can sometimes get the retina to go back into place and can fasten it there.

Alvarez

Someone wants to know if this disease will damage the brain, but I don't see how it could. Usually all the detached retina does is to leave the person with a big dark area in his field of vision.

A number of people have asked about a staphylococcus (or a "staph infection, as most people call it) and why it sometimes is so dangerous. A staphylococcus is a common germ which grows in the form of a bunch of grapes—hence the name, from the Greek staphilo, meaning "a bunch of grapes," and coccus—a berry.

There are several types, with different possiblities for doing harm. One type, which grows in the skin of all of us, seldom does any harm. Another type may produce boils; or in the case of an infant, it may produce an ugly infection on the skin of the face.

Another type—the dangerous one, and much feared—sometimes "gets loose" and scattered about in a hospital, particularly in the ward where the newborn infants are. This form of "staph" is dangerous because it is resistant to antibiotics, and hence it is often hard to get rid of. Staph can produce abscesses in tissues or in bone. Fortunately, today we have antibiotics which will kill most of these germs and can thus save the patient.

CANCER NOT CONTAGIOUS

Some people write, much worried because they say two or three people who work in their office have recently gotten cancer, and now the survivors wonder if the disease can be caught through sneezing or coughing, or from touching files and papers the sick people have touched. We doctors have no evidence that cancer will be transmitted in that way.

To show how little "catching" cancer is, long years ago, around 1898, that great surgeon of Chicago, Dr. Nicholas Senn, while operating on a patient with cancer, made a cut in the skin of his own arm, and then, taking a bit of cancer from the patient, put it under his skin and sewed it in there. It did not grow.

Since then, this experiment has been performed many a time on volunteers, and it has been found that usually cancerous tissue, when transplanted, will grow only when the person is so nearly dead of cancer that apparently his tissues have lost all of their original strong powers of resistance.

I have known many people who had so much natural resistance to the growth of cancer that, after they were looked on as hopeless, they lived on for years. Sir Peter Buck, the great anthoropologist of Polynesia, when operated on was found to have an incurable cancer growing in his liver. Perhaps because he was a strongly built man, he lived on for four years.

The other day, I received a letter from an old friend who must be now around the age of 80. Some 40 years ago, when I began to work alongside of him, he had had one leg and thigh removed because of a highly malignant cancer of a foot. Shortly after the operation, the cancer returned in his groin, but then it never grew, apparently because his body resistance was too strong.

I am always interested in hearing of something that will help handicapped people to take care of themselves and get about, and then perhaps go back to work. Accordingly, a while ago I was much interested when I heard that Mrs. Eliott D. Odell, an able woman, after suffering a stroke, used all her inventive powers to plan clothes for women who have only one useable hand. She has created such things as girdles and brassieres that can be put on and fastened with one hand.

HE GIVES AWAY GRAND PRIZES

Is there something you want to know? Do you want to win a set of valuable books or other instructive prizes? Then ask Andy.

Andy will answer questions submitted by child readers and those who submit the questions he selects to answer will receive worthwhile prizes.

The youngster who asks the first question answered each day receives a 20-volume set of the World Book Encyclopedia and of the second question a Hammond Atlas or Globe.

Andy sends a complete, 20-volume set of the World Book Encyclopedia to Ann Hero, age 12, of Northfield, Minn., for her question:

How are agates formed?

Rubies are red; emeralds are green, but both of these rare beauties are prized as precious gems. Agates are stippled and striped, banded and bordered with rainbow colors, and these handsome stones are treasured as semiprecious stones. Nature made many of them.

An agate is created in secrecy and total darkness, and the patient process takes ages of time. Its birthplace is a small hole, an empty pocket in a porous rock. It is formed in the earth's never-ending water cycle and created from assorted chemicals in the earth's crust. Its main ingredient is silica, a chemical compound of silicon and oxygen.

Silica is the main ingredient in a variety of rocky minerals, and the silicates make up more than half of the earth's crust. They form milky white pebbles of quartz and most of the sand on the beach, a variety of glassy crystals, some clear and some tinted with rainbow colors. Semiprecious onyx and chalcedony, carnelian and jasper, chrysoprase and agate also are silicate minerals made mostly of silica.

The silicates have endured through ages of ceaseless change and upheaval in the earth's crust. They have been melted in volcanic lava and smashed by pounding waves, dissolved in running water and lifted high and dry with rising mountains. These geological events modelled and remodelled each deposit of silicate and gave it its present form.

Tinted With Other Minerals

The creation of an agate began when molecules of silica were dissolved by the greedy tongues of rain water lapping over the rocks. Other minerals also were stolen, and a variety of particles too small to be seen were suspended in the water. Some of the water sank through a porous bedrock and seeped into a small hole or empty pocket.

The ground water evaporated or seeped slowly away, leaving its load of chemicals behind to line the rocky pocket. The deposited agate grew in hard layers tinted with other minerals that happened to be dissolved in the ground water. Later, the bedrock crumbled to free the pocketful of agate. It was still crusted with bedrock and had to be cut open to show its handsome colors and designs.

Banded agate may be striped with blue and grey, black or yellow or candy-colored brown. Its stripes may be straight or wavy, and a sample of sparkling agate is ringed with colored circles. Moss agate is set with dark threads of manganese minerals that look like fairy ferns frozen in glassy globules.

★ ★ ★

Andy sends a World Book Atlas to Carol Coover, age 11, of Tulsa, Okla., for her question:

Does nature form reddish brown, rose-shaped rocks?

These amazing little stones are indeed formed by nature. If you search through the sandy stretches of Oklahoma, chances are you will find one or perhaps several of them. The stone is rosy pink or rusty red. Its rings of thick, rosy petals look as though some child had modelled them of clay. Often the stone has two of these rocky roses, stuck together back to back.

The flowery stone is modelled by nature from barite, a mineral compound of the elements sulfur, barium and oxygen. Its particles have a shape of their own, and this shape directs the form that barite takes in masses and crystals. Under certain conditions molecules of barite gather together in these pretty little stones called desert roses.

Fashion Leader To Try Acting

By DORIS KLEIN

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Baby Jane Holzer, pace-setter of the international jet set, says she's going to work as an actress.

Which means that acting, long Out in high society, is now In.

Jane jetted into town the other day and proclaimed in her fashionable little-girl whisper: "Not working is like death."

She wound up with a bundle of movie offers.

At 23, Jane is the young woman whom millions of other women have been copying the last two years—from her lioness mane of hair, three-inch false eyelashes and lipstickless lips, to her boots and above-knee skirts.

Fifth Avenue stores ordered mannequins resembling her. Fashion magazines devoted whole sections to her.

"There were so many girls at Ondine's, a fashionable New York discotheque, who wound up looking like me, that people I've never met would go up to them and ask, 'How are you, Baby Jane!'"

SIGNED FOR TOUR

She was signed to guide a jet-setter's tour of New York for one television show, ABC's The Wild, Wild East, Nov. 9, and taped a Frank Sinatra-Sammy Davis Jr. television special (CBS, Nov. 24).

BABY JANE
. . . bundle of offers

But not before taking acting lessons. Which may have put Jane ahead of the other jet setters who've toyed with acting.

Iran's Princess Soraya was panned by critics in her first movie. Princess Radziwill, Jacqueline Kennedy's sister, decided it was wiser to take acting lessons instead of accepting an offer in Summer Stock.

"Actually," said Jane, "up to now, my acting roles have been so far off-Broadway, they've been practically underground."

2,000 STRANDED

Armada to Aid Cuba Refugees

KEY WEST, Fla. (UPI) — The United States Monday planned a "sealift" that will ferry some 2,000 stranded Cuban refugees here from the Port of Camarioca. Indications were that it may get under way within 48 hours.

A mounting stream of small boats—most of them carrying only the crews which sailed them to Camarioca — flowed across the Straits of Florida into the U.S. coast guard base here.

"They're coming in like flies," said a Coast Guard official who reported a total of 84 boats in since Saturday — 44 of them since midnight Sunday.

There were at least 49 refugees aboard the vessels. They managed to escape from Camarioca despite the official cutoff in refugee departures put into effect by Premier Castro last week.

Another 47 boats were en route here, according to the Coast Guard.

The projected sealift may begin by tonight, reliable sources said. Present plans call for passenger - carrying vessels chartered by the U.S. government to dock at the deep-water port of Matanzas, instead of Camarioca.

Cuban authorities would shuttle the stranded refugees from Camarioca to Matanzas.

66,000 on Petition

AMSTERDAM (AP) — Nearly 66,000 persons have signed a petition asking the Dutch Parliament not to pass a bill approving Crown Princess Beatrix's marriage in March to West German diplomat Claus Von Amsbert. The petition committee announced Monday more support is expected. It says Von Amsberg, 39, is not acceptable because of his Second World War activities as a German soldier.

Princess Ill But Attends Hollywood Ball

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Fighting fatigue and laryngitis, Britain's Princess Margaret said little and danced not at all at a dazzling charity ball that broke up in the wee hours today. The occasion was a dinner-dance for the World Adoption International Fund.

The princess, in a cornflower-blue gown, wore a diamond crown and a necklace with marble-sized diamonds. Her husband, the Earl of Snowdon, chatted affably throughout the dinner with any and all about him, including comedian Bob Hope.

The princess appeared momentarily upset, witnesses said, by one incident. An unidentified man in a brown business suit, a drink in one hand, made his way to within 10 feet of where she sat when security officers stopped him.

The man, described by witnesses as "obnoxiously drunk," began shouting unintelligibly and officers hustled him out of the ballroom.

RELEASED, RUNS AWAY

Police did not arrest the man because, they said, the incident had occurred on private property. He was released and ran off down the street.

Princess Margaret put in a long day. She didn't return to her hotel until about 3 a.m. Monday, after an exclusive Hollywood party at a nightclub.

She began growing hoarse after arising early to look at British-made goods at a department store.

The hoarseness increased as she visited an art museum, had lunch with Hollywood luminaries and watched movies being made at Universal Studios.

She intended, despite her laryngitis, to carry on today, visiting a British old folks' home, the California Institute of Technology and Jet Propulsion Laboratory in nearby Pasadena, attending a reception at the home of the British consul-general and yet another Hollywood party tonight.

Vatican Council To Close Dec. 8

VATICAN CITY (UPI)—Pope Paul VI will close the historic ecumenical council in a solemn state ceremony Dec. 8, it was officially announced today.

Archbishop Pericle Felici, the council's secretary-general, made the announcement in St. Peter's Basilica as more than 2,000 bishops assembled for the final days of work after a week-long recess.

It was also announced that a public session will be held Dec. 6 for the promulgation of council decrees on priestly life, missions and the role of the church in the modern world.

Archbishop Felici's announcement was the first offical word that the council would end on Dec. 8, although the date had been mentioned as the likely closing time by Vatican sources.

The ecumenical council opened on Oct. 11, 1962, under the late Pope John XXIII. The current session is the fourth since then.

In council action today, the bishops considered an overhaul of the system of indulgences, which Martin Luther once called "pious frauds invented to make money."

KILGALLEN
. . . dies at 52

Dirigible Trip Aided Press Career

NEW YORK (AP) — Dorothy Kilgallen, dead at 52, started her rise to fame as a columnist and television personality by circling the globe in a breath-taking 24 days.

The year was 1936, and by dirigible and by China Clipper she worked her way across land and sea. Her daily reports made her a celebrity.

Death came to Miss Kilgallen Monday as she slept after appearing as a regular panelist on the Sunday night What's My Line? television show and writing her Voice of Broadway syndicated column.

An autopsy failed to reveal the cause of death. Dr. James Luke, examiner, said further tests will be made.

APPEARED AFTER DEATH

Even in death Miss Kilgallen was seen and read. Her column was published in the New York Journal-American and she was seen in a video-taped appearance of To Tell the Truth.

Miss Kilgallen was born in Chicago into a newspaper family. Her father, James L. Kilgallen, was with the now defunct International News Service for many years and now is with the Hearst Headline Service.

Her father was transferred to New York and she grew up in Brooklyn. As a summer cub reporter in 1931 she got her first byline and never returned to college.

Her husband is Broadway producer Dick Kollmar, 54. They had three children, Richard Kollmar Jr., Mrs. Larry Grossman and Kerry Kollmar.

Lester Patrick Memorial Set Up

NEW YORK (AP)—A six-man committee, headed by President Clrence Campbell of the National Hockey League and President Bill Jennings of New York Rangers, was today named to select the first winner of the Lester Patrick Memorial Award.

The award will be given annually for long and meritorious service to hockey in the United States.

Others named to the committee were Eddie Shore, former outstanding Boston Bruin defenceman and currently owner of Springfield Indians in the American Hockey League; Red Smith, New York Hearld Tribune sports columnist; Ben Olan of The Associated Press, and Roone Arledge, vice-president in charge of sports for the American Broadcasting Co.

Segregated Voting Slammed by Indians

DUNCAN — Segregated voting in Monday's election here has been sharply criticized by Cowichan Indian band members.

"We should have been able to vote at the same place as the white man," Chief Mike Underwood said today.

Only 57 of 222 eligible Indian voters (25 per cent) cast ballots. In 1963 with integrated voting 86 per cent of the Indians voted.

"The system will have to be changed next time. People resented it," commented tribesman Eddy Elliott.

An exclusive Indian polling station was set up on the reserve to allow Indians to become more familiar with the method of voting said returning officer Fred Spencer.

In the past, Indians voted alongside whites at Duncan armories, said Chief Underwood.

Cowichan Indian agent Ronald Sampson said the principle of segregation was wrong.

"If the reserve is the handiest spot for a polling booth, I would like to see it used by Indians and non-Indians," he sid.

LESAGE vs. ROBARTS IN NEXT ELECTION?

TORONTO (CP)—Will it be Lesage vs. Robarts the next time.

Some insiders in the two main parties figure that neither Prime Minister Pearson nor Conservative Leader Diefenbaker will be around for the next federal general election whenever it may come.

They say the likely choices for the next round are Liberal Premier Jean Lesage of Quebec and Conservative Premier John Robarts of Ontario.

PCs Bid To Form Cabinet

PRINCE ALBERT (CP)—Conservative Leader Diefenbaker said today if Prime Minister Pearson "intends to stay to meet Parliament there will be a strong challenge immediately on the question of integrity."

He told reporters the parliamentary challenge will cover a variety of things besides the Dorion inquiry into the Lucien Rivard scandal. He said other parties have spoken strongly on this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker said if the government should be defeated on a motion of this type, "It would be the duty of the prime minister to ask the governor-general to see if another party could form a government."

On the question of integrity in government, "this is one matter" on which Social Credit Leader Thompson has spoken very definitely, Mr. Diefenbaker said.

NDP Leader Douglas has been equally strong and so has Creditiste Leader Real Caouette.

Amplifying on remarks he made in a television appearance Monday, Mr. Diefenbaker said it was "a piece of effrontery" for Mr. Pearson to say that if he did not get a majority there would be an election in a year or 18 months.

DENIES RIGHT

Mr. Pearson had no constitutional right to give this advice to the governor-general, but must advise the governor general there is another party that can form a government, he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker, wearing a sweater under a grey business suit, met reporters in his private railway car just before lunch.

He was "rather surprised at the failure of the NDP with all the power they claim they possess in electing so few members."

He noted they had fewer seats than in 1945 when they got 28, and in 1957, when they elected 25.

"It is very obvious socialism has no appeal to the Canadian people."

Mr. Diefenbaker said he could not recall any parliamentary parallel to Monday's election outcome.

He said that in the United Kingdom in the 1846-1885 period there were a number of "uncertain" elections and a number of minority governments. But in the past, "never has there been a government stay in power with no representation in three provinces and one each in two."

Mr. Diefenbaker added: "The

'ELECTORS SPOKE' —PEARSON

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson, his Liberal party virtually halted in its track by the Canadian voters, hid his disappointment Monday night and cheerfully said that Parliament would be carried on in the best interests of Canada.

There was no doubt about his disappointment. He already had a minority government and he called the election for the express purpose of gaining a majority.

"I think it's a disappointing result — naturally — because we campaigned on the issue of majority government," he said.

"The electors . . . have spoken."

The 68-year-old prime minister had gone through a long, tense day, suffering from the aftermath of flu. He was tired from the campaign that had taken him 23,000 miles by air alone and the results of his efforts gave him little joy.

"But I am gratified that there were more Liberals elected than any other party," he said into a bank of television cameras just before midnight.

NOT BITTER

He showed no bitterness over his failure to get the majority.

A reporter reminded the prime minister that he had said he didn't want to head another minority government; that he would prefer someone else to do so.

"Yes, I expressed a preference for that," he replied. "But you don't always get your first preference.

"At the moment, I am still the prime minister and leader of the government and we'll leave it at that."

Barring a major victory for either the Liberals or Conservatives, many observers suggested during the campaign that this would probably be the last election for both Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker.

HAD SETBACKS

Since Mr. Pearson became Liberal leader in 1957, he has experienced some massive ups and downs at the polls, but Monday's stand - pat results were easily the most disappointing.

When the Diefenbaker tornado of 1958 left Mr. Pearson's Liberals with only 48 seats, compared with the 105 they held previously, the resounding defeat was not surprising and the relatively new leader was not held responsible.

In 1962, the Liberals under Mr. Pearson more than doubled their representation to 99. A year later they formed a minorit ygovernment with 129.

At dissolution, the Liberals were down to 127 and this campaign, costing untold millions, nudged them back to where they were two years ago.

All Parties Disappointed

(Times News Services)

Prime Minister Lester Pearson has been denied the "clear majority" he sought from the Canadian electorate in an election that took from him two of his cabinet ministers, put his own future in question, and set the possibility of another national vote within two years—or sooner.

Early today a still game, but bitterly disappointed Pearson saw these final results:

Liberals 129, Conservatives 99, New Democrats 21, Social Credit 5, Creditiste 9 and Independent 2.

The Liberals had gained only two seats numerically from the last Parliament—seats they could have won if byelections had been held to fill the four vacancies in the last election—and lost some of their brighter lights.

Only the opposition parties really gained in the vote with most of the glory—but not as much as they had hoped for—going to the New Democrats.

Standings when Pearson dissolved the last 265-seat parliament to seek a majority to "get this country rolling" were:

Liberal 127, Conservative 92, NDP 18, Socreds 9, Creditiste 13 and Independents two. There were four vacancies.

With 96 per cent of the civilian polls reported Monday night,

Election Stories, Results
Pages 3, 8, 12, 13, 14, 15, 27

the Liberals had 39 per cent of the popular vote. The Conservatives had 33 per cent, the NDP 18, Creditistes five, Social Credit four and others one.

With all seats reported, an astonishing 223 of the 265 seats showed no political change from 1963.

There remained a possibility that some narrowly-won victories might be reversed when results of the armed services vote are announced Saturday and added to the civilian results in each riding. There was almost no chance of this changing the minority situation.

Next Session Expected in January

A new session of Parliament is not expected to be called until early in 1966, probably in January.

The question then will be the willingness or otherwise of the opposition parties to unite on a confidence issue and overthrow the government. If this happened, Mr. Pearson could ask Governor-General Vanier for another dissolution of Parliament or suggest he call in Mr. Diefenbaker to form a government.

As the voters headed to the polls Monday the forecasters were predicting the Liberals would get a 140-seat majority. Pearson himself was confident of a clear margin over all other parties.

What turned the voters against him and yet made them so indecisive in choosing an alternative likely spells the end of the careers of both Pearson and Conservative leader John Diefenbaker.

The same 10 million voters obviously didn't want Pearson to form his long-sought majority, nor did they feel Diefenbaker was the logical alternative.

The same "no" was handed New Democratic Leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas, who had hoped for the first time that his party might stand a chance of forming a government.

The other splinter parties, Social Credit headed by Robert Thompson, and Creditiste by Real Caouette, did no better than expected.

PM to Meet Cabinet Wednesday

Pearson, maintaining a brave front despite obvious personal anguish, said his cabinet will meet Wednesday to study the results and decide on the future.

No longer with that cabinet are Agriculture Minister Harry Hays, defeated in Calgary, and Mines Minister J. Watson McNaught, sent into retirement on Prince Edward Island.

Pearson declined to discuss the possibility of a coalition with the NDP—or his own future.

"I am still prime minister and head of the government and I think I will leave it at that," said Pearson in Ottawa.

Douglas in Burnaby, B.C., ruled out coalition with any other party except in some "unforseen crisis."

Opposition leaders saw no reason why the government even in its minority position couldn't run a full four-year term, but Pearson made it clear his position hadn't changed on the need for a majority government in Canada.

In the campaign, Pearson caused an outburst of objections from all parties when he said that if his party didn't win a majority there would have to be another election in a year or 18 months.

The Liberal hope for a majority was lost early Monday night when the Conservatives made gains in the Maritimes. If they had not made wins along the Atlantic coast, the Liberals would have been in with a strong government.

They also missed out on the increased seats the forecasters said they could get in Quebec, Western Canada and Ontario.

'NEITHER WANTED AS PRIME MINISTER'

Dief, Pearson Out, Says Writer

By PETER NEWMAN

An Election Interpretive

The judgment of the Canadian people was harsh and final: They do not want either Lester Pearson or John Diefenbaker as their prime minister.

In their fourth confrontation, neither party leader was able to make any impression in the other's stronghold. The Conservatives are back with one seat in the nation's two largest cities — Montreal and Toronto. The Liberals are down to one seat in the prairie provinces.

No national government can propertly represent the nation's various interests under these conditions. It is now clear beyond any doubt that only a change in the leadership of both parties can solve the impasse.

The Liberal party must and choose a leader who will have appeal in the west, as well as commanding either through himself or an appropriate lieutenant, the respect and support of the new Quebec.

URBAN AREAS

The Conservative party must find and elect a leader who can find resonance with the nation's dynamic urban areas. This is particularly urgent for the Tories, because the next election will take place following the redistribution of constituencies which will give the cities mueh greater proportional importance.

The pattern of the election results — the rejection of both Pearson and Diefenbaker by large blocs of regional voters—makes it clear that with different leaders either party could have carved out a handy majority. (If this had not been the case, the NDP and Socred share of the votes would have been a great deal larger.)

It's far too early to predict who these new Conservative and Liberal leaders might be, but some factors bearing on their choice did emerge out of Monday's astonishing results:

In the Liberal party, Walter Gordon and his left-wing activities have lost a great deal of prestige. It was at their urging that this election was called, and it was on their platform and strategy that it was fought.

Unless Lester Pearson exerts his considerable personal prestige in the opposite direction, the Liberal party could well be inherited by its "old guard."

MARTIN LEADS

The immediate prospect is for a handover to Paul Martin.

Two other men are definitely in the running: Mitchell Sharp, who stands in the ideological middle and could win support from some of the party's left wingers, and Robert Winters, the former St. Laurent minister, who staged a successful political comeback in Toronto.

The state of succession in the Conservative party is even more obscure. For one thing, the job isn't likely to fall open in the foreseeable future. John Diefenbaker's magnificent campaign has earned him the right, which no member of his party can now deny, to choose the time of his retirement.

Right now, George Hees is the front-runner among the

NDP Scotches Coalition Talk

BURNABY (CP) — T. C. Douglas Monday night brushed aside talk of a coalition between the Liberals and his New Democratic Party and laid down preliminary conditions for supporting another minority government.

Mr. Douglas said in an interview a minority administration would not have to implement the entire NDP platform, but must offer good legislation to improve the way of life of Canadians.

The national NDP leader said a coalition was out of the question except in "some unforseen crisis."

Declining to detail conditions for NDP support, Mr. Douglas said, however, he would put up a major battle in the Commons if there is any attempt to water down the recommendations of the Hall royal commission on health services.

During the latter stages of the campaign, Mr. Douglas said Prime Minister Pearson had tossed away two important essentials of the Hall report. Mr. Pearson was prepared to give private insurance carriers a role and had backed down on providing medical insurance for everyone at the outset.

. . . MINORITY

The Liberals had predicted they would boost their holdings in Quebec from 47 to 60 seats. They won 55.

They came out of the election in Ontario with the same they hed begun with, 51.

Only the big cities gave the Liberals the kind of support they sought. Montreal elected Liberals in 20 of its 21 ridings, a duplicate of 1963; Toronto 14 out of 18, a drop of two, and Vancouver four out of six, repeating 1963.

On the Prairies the government party ran into a stone wall, winning only one of 48 seats. They took three of them two years ago.

The voting turnout was about 73 per cent of the 10,225,000 eligibles, well below the 79.6 per cent of 1963 and the record 79.8 per cent of 1962.

Canada now has had five elections since 1957 when the Conservatives took office on a minority win. In 1958 the Conservatives won a record majority, slumped back to a minority in 1962 and lost to a Liberal minority in 1963.

It cost the taxpayers $13,500,000 to finance the latest election, it has been officially estimated.

The Liberals were shut out in three provinces — Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Only in Newfoundland did the Liberals really shine, with the staunch backing of Liberal Premier Joey Smallwood. They recaptured all seven seats on the island province, killing a comeback bid by former Conservative Solocitor-General William J. Browne.

But the Conservatives had the backing of Tory Premiers Wilter Shaw in Prince Edward Island, and Robert Stanfield in Nova Scotia.

They gained all four seats on the island, winning two from the Liberals and knocking out MacNaught in one of them. In Nova Scotia the Conservatives picked up four seats.

While Pearson's chances in the election were hurt by campaign charges of bribery and impropriety in his administration, Diefenbaker's were improved by a reunion in his party and the return to the fold of several cabinet ministers who quit during his 1963 regime over the issue of whether Canadian missiles should be armed with U.S.-made nuclear warheads.

While Pearson lost ministers, former Tory cabinet members were returned.

Four former Conservative ministers came back — former citizenship minister Richard Bell, in Ottawa area Carleton; trade minister George Hees in Ontario's Northumberland, and justice minister Davie Fulton in the B.C. riding of Kamloops, and forl estry minister Martial Asselin in Qunebec's Charlevoix.

Both Hees and Fulton are top contenders for the Tory leadership when Diefenbaker steps down, a step that may have been hastened by tonight's results.

'Let Pundits Enjoy Themselves'

Asked about this, Diefenbaker replied with a smile that his retirement had been forecast as far back as 1929.

"I allow the pundits and prophets to enjoy themselves while I continue t oserve the people," said Diefenbaker with a smile.

The NDP had one major defeat. Its brigit light in Quebec, French-Canadian leader Robert Cliche, was defeated.

"I have been beaten by the Liberal machine," said Cliche, who said he would continue working for the NDP and would take another chance in the next election.

Other colorful losers included a former Liberal cabinet minister and a one-time Social Crediter, both going down in Quebec.

Yvon Dupuis, former minister without portfolio fired from the cabinet by Pearson afer being charged with influence peddling, was defeated.

Guy Marcoux, who wrote the famous pamphlet dubbed "The Affair of the Six" charging six Social Crediters accepted bribes to support the previous minority government, was also turned down by the voters.

Three Quebec newcomers to Liberal ranks were elected, surprising almost no one. Jean Marchand, 47, former president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions; newspaperman Gerard Pelletier, 46, and law professor Pierre Elliott Trudeau, 45, had been hailed as "new look" Liberals in the province and potential cabinet material.

Robert Winters, Liberal works minister prior to his defeat in Nova Scotia in the 1957 election, won easily in the York West seat vacated by Liberal Red Kelly, the hockey star. He turned back George Hogan, prominent Conservative organizer.

Several former cabinet ministers were defeated, including Howard Green who was the Conservative external affairs minister when the Diefenbaker government fell.

BUT PARTIES DIVIDED ON POLICIES

Leaders See Long Life for Minority Regime

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — For the fourth time in eight years, Canada faces the prospect of minority government.

Nobody here is firmly predicting how long it will last, or how well it will work this time.

Minority party leaders T. C. Douglas of the New Democratic Party and Robert Thompson of the Social Credit say it could last and work well. But in their post-election comments Monday they were deeply divided on the sort of policies they would support.

Prime Minister Pearson, who may command 129 or so seats in the 265-seat House, declined any prediction beyond noting he is still prime minitser and that the Liberal government intends to carry on.

Opposition Leader Diefenbaker, with about 100 supporters, gave every indication of keeping up his drive to regain the office of prime minister, in line with his stated ambition of becoming the third Canadian prime minister to return to the office after a defeat.

The other two were Conservative Sir John A. Macdonald, the country's first prime minister, and W. L. Mackenzie King, long-time Liberal prime minister.

STARTED IN MINORITY

Mr. Diefenbaker's Conservatives took office as a minority government in 1957 and then won a sweeping victory in 1958. They fell short of a majority in 1962 and then defeat in the Commons on a confidence issue involving nuclear arms forced another election in 1963.

That vote returned Mr. Pearson's Liberals as a minority. On Monday the country rebuffed his bid for a majority.

Governments won support of less than a clear majority in four earlier elections, and carried on—for a time.

In 1921, King's Liberals won 117 seats in a 235-seat House, with 50 Conservatives, 65 Progressives, and three Labor members in opposition. This was the first time third parties as such won seats in a Canadian general election.

Mr. King was able to control the House with opposition support. In 1925, the Liberals won only 101 seats in a 245-seat House. But Mr. King retained office for nine months, stickhandling his way through an opposition of 116 Conservatives, 24 Progressives and four others.

SOUGHT DISSOLUTION

When he appeared likely to meet defeat in the House, he sought an election but dissolution was refused by Governor-General Byng. Conservative Arthur Meighen was called on to form a government and his ministry fell in three months. Mr. King had his election.

In 1926 the Liberals won only 118 of the 245 seats, but the support of 10 Liberal-Progressives enabled them to carry on.

Again, in 1945, the Liberals won only 118 of the 245 seats. But before Parliament met, enough independent Liberals—many of whom had defeated official Liberal candidates—joined the Liberal caucus to preserve the government.

Now NDP Leader Douglas, heading a 21-man group, has the firmest grip on the balance of Parliament in the new Commons. On crucial issues his party could give the government a clear win over other opposition forces.

But Mr. Diefenbaker made it plain Monday night that he believes it would be improper for the Pearson government to seek a new general election without advising the Governor-General first to call on the Conservatives to form a ministry.

WOULD NEED HELP

A Conservative administration in the newly-elected Commons would need the support of all other groups now in opposition to have a working majority — an even more difficult arrangement to maintain than a tacit or actual Liberal-NDP alliance.

The widest split among the smaller parties appears to be between the Social Credit and the NDP.

Mr. Thompson, whose party elected five members, said the election result clearly was no mandate for the Liberals to introduce compulsory medical care insurance.

Mr. Douglas, however, saw the increase in popular support for his party as clear evidence the public wants such insurance, and he said his group will abide no watering down of the universal principle.

HEADQUARTERS: GLOOM, HOPE, DISMAY

By JOYCE FAIRBAIRN
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — In Liberal national headquarters there was gloom and despondency.

Six blocks away the Tory camp was filled with cheer, some surprise and finally disappointment that they hadn't been able to make the minority win their own.

Now that election night is a well-organized Madison Avenue production, the national headquarters themselves are not heavily patronized by either public or press.

Prime Minister Lester B. Pearson, who spends the final hours in Ottawa rather than his home riding of Algoma East, does drop in briefly to watch initial results.

But because of the limited capacity of the old house at 251 Cooper St., the bulk of the evening shifts to the Chateau Laurier Hotel, a stone's throw from Parliament Hill.

The prime minister, wearing a grey suit and a red carnation in his lapel, started off the evening in public in good spirits. He ended it the same way.

With his wife Maryon and daughter Patsy, plus a small circle of top Liberal officials, he watched the eastern results in a second-floor room at Cooper Street.

They were not encouraging, and the headquarters staff began to droop visibly as did the innumerable bouquets of red carnations which were scattered through the rooms.

National Liberal organizer Keith Davey, one of the chief advisers who had urged Pearson to go to the country, moved continuously and silently from his ground-floor office to the prime minister's room.

His pin-striped suit was rumpled, there was a pencil in his mouth and for a time he spoke to no one.

Outside his office there was a map of Canada and red and blue thumb tacks were dotted over it to indicate Liberal and Tory wins.

At 8:45 p.m., after the Liberals had been wiped out in the bellweather province of Prince Edward Island and almost routed in Nova Scotia, Davey shook his head

"We'll be very lucky to get the 140 seats for that majority," he said.

Liberal failure in the Maritimes was due to the "machine" of Tory Premier Robert Stanfield who pulled out the stops for Diefenbaker.

"That machine creamed us," said the former Toronto radio executive. "It was Mr. Stanfield's bid for the party leadership and it was successful."

Bill MacEachern, a former newspaperman who is the public relations stalwart at Liberal headquarters, thought the results were turning out a "mess."

The prime minister left for the Chateau waving and smiling and saying he was "still confident" for a majority win.

Over in Tory headquarters Davey's counterpart, Toronto lawyer Edwin Goodman, exhibited guarded optimism.

"If you gave me 5,000 votes or maybe 10,000 votes to scatter around we could win this election," he said. "We are just great in Quebec but we cracked in Southwestern Ontario."

Tory headquarters occupies three floors in an office building in downtown Ottawa. On one floor there was a huge chart of all the ridings in Canada.

On the next floor was the staff conclave where Goodman maintained steady telephone contact with Opposition Leader John Diefenbaker in a Tory blue room with blue furniture and blue drapes.

From time to time a cheer would seep out from behind that closed door. One hearty one went to the election of former Tory trade minister George Hees who is one of Goodman's personal political projects.

The diminutive lawyer was in a talkative mood as the results poured in.

"So far we've got MacNaught, Regenstreif and Gallup," he crowed over the defeat of the Liberal mines minister and the inaccurate predictions of national pollsters.

At another point he noted that Forestry Minister Maurice Sauve had won by "100 stinking votes—all we needed was 50 more people to finish him off."

Back in the Chateau the Pearsons were ordering sandwiches and coffee. When the coffee machine was plugged in it blew a fuse.

Pearson phoned his workers in Algoma East to say thank you.

"Someone has just lost $65,000 in trying to win a seat," he was reported as saying. The inference drawn was directed at television personality Joel Aldred who launched a high-powered and unsuccessful campaign against Pearson in the riding.

After the British Columbia results completed the list Pearson moved down to the ornate convention hall in the hotel.

To a cluster of supporters and the ever-present newsmen he delivered his formal statement in French and English with a weariness born of disappointment.

His final words were:

"It has been a long hard campaign."

"I think I'll go home to bed."

For the Liberals perhaps the most succinct comment came from Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp.

"What happened," he was asked.

"I don't know," he replied.

DEACHMAN REPEATS 'FREAK'

His Political Future Dims

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Conservative Howard Green's political future appeared dim today following his second consecutive defeat to Liberal Grant Deachman.

The former external affairs minister put up a tough battle as he and Deachman kept everyone in suspense until the final Vancouver-Quadra poll was reported. The result gave Deachman 12,534 and Green 12,279.

Green's only hope lay in the remote possibility of a heavy armed service vote or a recount. Both are regarded unlikely.

The veteran campaigner refused to admit defeat right to the end, and chose to talk about other facets of the election.

"The general result indicates the folly of having an election called at this time. The government is right back at about the same position it was before. Now there has to be some way found to make Parliament function.

"I don't think the Liberals and New Democrats will form a coalition. Mr. (T. C.) Douglas said he wouldn't do that," he added.

Green, 69, had been defeated in one of the biggest upsets of the 1963 election.

He won every election since 1935 until he met Deachman, and fell victim to a revolt against the Diefenbaker government, in which he had been works minister, and later, minister of external affairs.

Deachman, 52, a public relations man and professional fund-raiser, used his vocational talents to set up a tremendous political organization.

Green's team had considered the 1963 setback a "freak occurrence" and had been confident Green's popularity would win out Monday.

Manitoba Premier Duff Roblin had made a special trip to Vancouver to speak on Green's behalf.

Green was first elected to Parliament in 1935 in Vancouver-South, and switched to Vancouver-Quadra when it was formed in 1947. He won eight consecutive elections before 1963.

Grim Day For Accuser And Accused

QUEBEC (CP)—Both the accuser and the accused in the so-called scandal of the Social Credit sextet had a grim day Monday.

Dr. Guy Marcoux, who rocked the national campaign with a booklet containing vague allegations of attempted bribery and "shady" deals, ran a poor third in Quebec-Montmorency behind Liberal Ovide Laflamme and Creditiste Henry Borgia.

Formerly the right-hand man of Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson in the Commons, Dr. Marcoux charged in a booklet that a Social Credit organizer was offered $25,000 just after the 1963 election to round up five or six MPs who would agree to "sell themselves" to the minority Liberal group.

Six MPs and former MPs who signed a pledge to back the Liberals four days after the 1963 vote and retracted it a week later, vehemently denied they were bribed and said they would sue Dr. Marcoux for libel after this election. The provincial police investigated the allegations and found no evidence of a shady deal.

ONLY ONE SURVIVED

The six sought re-election as Creditistes Monday and five were beaten. Raymond Langlois, 29, a school teacher, was the sole survivor, winning in Megantic.

Gilbert Rondeau was defeated narrowly by Conservative Paul O. Trepanier, mayor of Granby, in Shefford.

The other four lost to Liberals. They are Gerard Perron (Beauce), Robert Beaule (Quebec East), Pierre-Andre Boutin (Dorchester) and Lucien Plourde (Quebec West), beaten in a close race by former labor leader Jean Marchand.

Creditiste representation in the Commons was reduced to nine from 13 seats at dissolution. The seven Quebec MPs who remained loyal to Mr. Thompson after the 1963 party split and defected later were wiped out at the polls.

Voters in No Mood For Majority Plea

19 B.C. Members Returned As NDP Improves Record

By DENNIS ORCHARD
Canadian Press

A lot of British Columbia voters stayed home Monday, and those who did go to the polls hadn't changed their minds.

They sent back to Ottawa all 19 incumbent MPs who ran in this federal election. What little enthusiasm they mustered leaned left, to the New Democratic Party, and right, to Social Credit.

The voters were in no mood to help Liberals to a national majority. Turnouts were almost uniformly lower than in 1963. The NDP, apparently at Liberals' expense, piled up fat majorities, improving their records from 1963 in almost every case.

The province's new standing: NDP 9, Liberal 7, Progressive Conservative 3, Social Credit 3.

Social Credit made the only numerical improvement with a victory in Okanagan-Revelstoke by Salmon Arm high school teacher Howard Johnston, 37, a gain from the Conservatives. The riding was undefended by Stuart Fleming, who quit politics after three terms in the Commons.

LAST TO FIRST

Mr. Johnston's first crack at the game brought Social Credit from a last-place stand in 1963 to a 268-vote victory over runner-up John Gracey, a Conservative.

Davie Fulton, with the way opened by retirement of another Conservative incumbent, swept back into federal politics with a 4,000-vote majority in Kamloops. The margin was 1,500 votes short of his edge three years ago in his last federal campaign, but better than most observers expected following his interim venture as provincial leader of his party.

B.C.'s other fresh face in Parliament will be feminine. Grace MacInnis, 60, became the province's first woman MP with a smashing victory over youngish Liberal Jack Austin in Vancouver Kingsway.

She takes a unique Socialist heritage into the Commons as a daughter of CCF founder J. S. Woodsworth, widow of six-term MP Angus MacInnis, and a reputation as an effective party organizer in nine provinces.

RESULTS SWIFT

Within an hour of the 7 p.m. close of polls it was clear that B.C. would send back T. C. Douglas, NDP leader, and its two cabinet men, Northern Affairs Minister Arthur Laing and Immigration Minister Jack Nicholson.

Much later the tabulation spelled another defeat for Howard Green, long the unbeatable "Mr. Quadra" of the residential Vancouver Quadra riding. Mr. Green fell for the second time to Liberal Grant Deachman, although he chopped the 1963 margin from 1,404 votes to about 275.

The former Conservative external affairs minister said he would make no concession pending the official count and service vote, but servicemen last time went 346-168 in Mr. Deachman's favor.

LIBERALS LOST

Liberal margins were uniformly lower except for Mr. Nicholson, whose relaxed immigration policies apparently found favor with the large Chinese - Canadian population of Vancouver Centre.

Mr. Douglas won by 10,670 votes in Burnaby-Coquitlam, the NDP's Barry Mather by 11,989 in New Westminster, and veteran Harold Winch by 7,773 in Vancouver East, close to a personal record in his stronghold.

Biggest majority in the province again went to Liberal Jack Davis in Coast-Capilano, but his 13,584-vote advantage over the NDP's William Deverell was about 2,000 below 1963.

RETAINING his father's old seat in Digby-Annapolis-Kings is Conservative J. Patrick Nowlan. His father, George Nowlan, was a former Tory finance minister.

Four Women MPs Win Out of a Field of 37

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

The number of women in the Commons was reduced from six to four in Monday's general election. Three were returned and one newcomer was added.

The New Democratic Party fielded 16 of the 37 women candidates but elected only one. Mrs. Grace MacInnis, 60, in Vancouver-Kingsway. She is the first women MP for British Columbia.

Mrs. MacInnis is the daughter of CCF founder J. S. Woodsworth, and widow of six-term MP Angus MacInnis. She took over the riding from Arnold Webster of the NDP who has retired.

The Liberals returned Mrs. Margaret Rideout in Westmorland in New Brunswick and Health Minister Judy LaMarsh in Niagara Falls.

MRS. WADDS WINS AGAIN

Mrs. Jean Wadds won Grenville-Dundas for the Conservatives for the fourth time.

In Northumberland, Liberal defender Pauline Jewett was defeated by George Hees, former Conservative cabinet minister.

Mrs. Margaret Konantz, also a Liberal member of the last House, lost Winnipeg South to Conservative L. R. (Bud) Sherman.

The sixth woman member of the 26th Parliament, Mrs. Elosie Jones of Saskatoon, did not run.

Four women were elected in the 1963 election. Mrs. Rideout and Mrs. Jones won their seats in byelections in 1964.

WIDOWS OF FORMER MPs

Mrs. MacInnis, Mrs. Wadds, and Mrs. Rideout are widows of former MPs. Mrs. MacInnis and Mrs. Wadds are also daughters of former members.

Miss Lamarsh defeated four other candidates including another woman, Conservative Mrs. Jean Douglas.

This was not the first win for Mrs. MacInnis. She was a member of the B.C. legislature from 1941 to 1945. Her husband, Angus MacInnis, who died last year, was an MP for six terms.

Mrs. Wadds is the widow of A. Clair Casselman, a former dean of the Commons, and daughter of Ontario's Lieutenant - Governor Earl Rowe. She was first elected in 1958 after the death of her first husband, and was re-elected in 1962 and 1963. She married Robert Wadds in 1964.

Mrs. Rideout, New Brunswick's first woman MP, won her seat in a 1964 byelection six months after the death of her husband, MP S. H. Rideout.

Perhaps the heroine in this general election was Mrs. Felicity Cochrane, defeated Conservative candidate in Toronto Parkdale.

She broke her leg in a fall down wet, slippery steps on a tour of polling stations. After her leg was put in a cast she insisted on returning to her headquarters in a wheelchair to thank her campaign workers. In 1958, Mrs. Cochrane was stricken with polio and regained the use of her legs after extensive therapy.

This year's 37 women candidates compared with 48 in 1953 and 43 in 1963. The last Parliament had the greatest number of women members at one time, with six.

The NDP nominated 16 women, Liberals and Progressive Conservatives eight each, Social Credit three, Communists one, and there was one Independent-Liberal.

SOCRED PULLS B.C.'s ONLY UPSET

SALMON ARM (CP) — Howard E. Johnston, who pulled British Columbia's only upset in the federal election, is an Okanagan native with a lifelong interest in Social Credit.

He won the Okanagan-Revelstoke riding from the Progressive Conservatives, a riding in which Social Credit ran a flat last in 1963.

Conservative's Stuart Fleming won in 1958 and retired from politics this year.

'Will Regret' Choice of Party

MONTREAL (CP)—Charles Taylor, New Democrat beaten in Montreal Mount Royal by an old friend who joined the Liberals, said Monday Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the Liberal, "will regret very deeply" his choice of party.

"A man of the left in a party of the right is always sad," the McGill University political scientist said of his University of Montreal law professor conqueror. Both men had collaborated on the "small L, liberal" magazine Cite Libre. (Free Community).

Agricultural Leaders' Bids Fail

EDMONTO (CP)—Two agriculture leaders who ran as New Democratic Party candidates failed to unseat Conservative members in Saskatchewan.

Alfred Gleave, former president of the Saskatchewan Farmers Union and National Farmers Union, was unsuccessful in Rosetown-Biggar.

Ed Nelson, president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and a former president of the Farmers Union of Alberta, ran in Wetaskiwin.

'Looking Forward to Doing Job'

KAMLOOPS (CP)—Davie Fulton, who won back the seat he held for 17 years, said Monday he looks forward to "doing my job by the Kamloops riding."

Mr. Fulton, who has been widely rumored as a possible successor to John Diefenbaker as leader of the Progressive Conservatives, quit federal politics in 1962 to become leader of the B.C. party.

He was defeated by Highways Minister P. A. Gaglardi in Kamloops in the last provincial election, in which no Conservatives were elected.

Asked whether he was glad to be back in federal politics Monday, he replied: "What do you think?"

Negro 'Wins' Despite Defeat

HAMILTON (CP)—Lincoln Alexander, who was 2,000 votes short of becoming the first Negro member of Parliament, said Monday night: "I feel that I've won something here, no matter what."

Mr. Alxander, Progressive Conservative candidate defated by Liberal Joseph Macaluso in Hamilton West, said in conceding: "This has been a personal victory for me and mine and I don't think I have to elaborate on that statement."

When he went to Mr. Macaluso's headquarters and embraced the winner, he told the jubilant Liberal supporters: "Get your guns ready because we're coming back again."

Manning's Son Unsuccessful

EDMONTON (CP)—Preston Manning, 23-year-old son of Alberta Premier Ernest Manning, was unsuccessful as a Social Credit candidate in Edmonton East.

Making his first bid in politics, Mr. Manning was runner-up to Conservative William Skoreyko in a five-way contest.

Premier Manning has not lost an election since he ran for the first time in 1935 in a provincial election. He was 25 then.

SERIOUS VIOLATIONS SAYS ALDRED

ESPANOLA, Ont. (CP) — Television personality Joel Aldred says there were "serious" election violtions in Algoma East where he was defeated Monday night by Prime Minister Pearson.

With 154 of 161 polls in, the final report Monday night, Mr. Aldred, the Conservative canndidate, had polled 5,575 votes to Mr. Pearson's 11,453.

"I believe there have been serious violations in this Algoma East election," Mr. Aldred said at his campaign headquarters in this community about 140 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie. He did not elaborate.

Mr. Aldred said he "would never concede defeat until everything is taken into account."

DIEFENBAKER GIGGLES AS POLLSTER WRIGGLES

PRINCE ALBERT (CP) — Conservative Leader Diefenbaker watched the election results Monday on television here and got some chuckles from Peter Regenstrief.

Regenstrief, a poll-taker, was a CBC election-night commentator. He had predicted a Liberal majority.

Mr. Diefenbaker "hooted" at the Regenstrief appearance, a spokesman said, relishing the sight of the poll-taker explaining away his prediction.

All-Important Seat For Leadership Bid

COBOURG, Ont. (CP)—George Hees charmed the voters of Northumberland into sending him back to Ottawa Monday, giving him an all-important Commons seat from which to vault into any Conservative leadership race.

The 55-year-old former Conservative trade minister, who resigned his cabinet post in 1963 after a policy dispute with his leader John Diefenbaker, narrowly defeated Liberal Pauline Jewett by capturing a larger share of the farm vote in this mainly rural riding.

"I can hardly wait until Parliament opens again," he said. But he would not comment on the possibility of seeking the leadership of the Progressive Conservative party.

"I'm afraid I'm unable to answer a question that is hypothetical," he said. "Mr. Diefenbaker is leader and will remain so until he wishes to relinquish his post."

Mr. Hees represented Toronto Broadview in the Commons from 1950 to 1963. He became transport minister after the Conservatives gained power in 1957 and in 1960 was made minister of trade and commerce.

In the spring of 1964 he became president of the Montreal and Canadian stock exchanges, and seemed of a mind to sit out this campaign, as he did the one in 1963, until offered the Northumberland nomination.

FARM A SPRINGBOARD

The Hees family has had a farm near Cobourg for more than 50 years, and the suave Toronto millionaire had used it as a weekend retreat. With this claim to residence in the riding, he jumped at the chance to do battle with Miss Jewitt, a political scientist who won Northumberland from the Conservatives in 1963.

Knocking on doors in Cobourg, Northumberland's main urban area, and meeting the farmers on their land in a strenuous personal campaign helped him reduce the Liberal strength in Cobourg and hold rural Conservatives. His margin was 313 votes with 101 of 129 polls reporting.

BETWEEN CANADA-U.S.

It's Business as Usual

By ARCH MacKENZIE

WASHINGTON (CP)—The return of the Liberals as the largest party in the Canadian House of Commons in Monday's general election spells business as usual with the United States, it was assumed here.

A Liberal victory had been expected in government circles. There was, however, no official comment from the state department, in keeping with standard policy concerning political events in most friendly countries.

U.S. officials had given every sign of wanting to avoid involvement this time after being drawn into the 1963 campaign because of an ill-timed public statement on Canadian acquisition of nuclear arms.

No special problems between the two countries appear to have been held up pending the Canadian voting. The most long-standing negotiation concerns a new civil air agreement to give Canada a deeper penetration of the U.S. and little progress has been visible.

More basic is the continuing consultation on meshing balance-of-payments problems in each country. A special committee established for that purpose met here in July and the second of several meetings a year is scheduled for Ottawa Nov. 19.

Victoria Daily Times

VICTORIA, B.C., TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1965 —PAGE 21

Arthur Mayse

Since nothing was demanded of us last Saturday night, we settled down to enjoy "The Kidnappers," a durable film tale of early-century Cape Breton which, in spite of cuts apparently made with a blunt axe, was the best show on any channel.

Even though we had seen it a couple of times before, we were captivated all over again by the two marvellously natural Canadian-Scottish small boys who yearn for a dog, and their grim, prickly-proud grandfather who sells his boots to buy them one.

As you may recall, this denouement is preceded by scenes in which the old tyrant bears down pretty hard on his grandsons. One such deals with a beating in the farm woodshed,

At this point our son and daughter became properly indignant.

For the rest of the picture, they insisted on regarding the grandfather as an absolute brute, and were not entirely mollified when he came round in the matter of the dog.

They were wrong, of course. He was, simply, a cape Breton Highlander of the country sort—although sterner than most—who was determined to do his duty as he saw it.

This is a habit of your Cape Bretoner. The land he lives in undoubtedly has something to do with the fact; it is harsh as it is beautiful, and even today, it does not yield an easy living to its people. For this reason, they tend to be firm of character.

★ ★ ★

Once, years ago, I witnessed the disciplining of a young Cape Bretoner. It was an awesome sight.

On the late afternoon this came about, I was driving fast and alone from the Strait of Canso north to Sydney and Louisburg.

Presently at the far end of a long, empty straightaway, I spotted someone walking the road shoulder. At closer range, the figure emerged as a woman pulling a child's wagon loaded with what looked to be firewood. On top o fthis cargo perched a small boy.

I pulled my speed down; but when the kid hopped off the wagon and darted across the road, my car was still moving at a brisk clip. As he disappeared under the nose, I swung hard over, coming to a stop a hectic few seconds later in the tall grass and weeds of a fallow field.

I looked around, afraid of what might be revealed. What I saw was the woman sitting on the wagon with the boy over her knee.

She spanked him with dignity and deliberation, swinging her hand high for each measured whack. Sitting in my car, which had remained upright, I winced at each new impact of hand on seat.

While it wasn't precisely a beating, it was quite a spanking, and if that young fellow isn't careful in traffic today, the blame is not chargeable to his mama!

The woman waited while I bounced my car out of the field, which, luckily for me, wasn't fenced or ditched. Then with that same iron dignity she apologized for her son's behavior—a tall, strong, farm woman with a Scots accent and the stern Cape Breton sense of duty.

★ ★ ★

This is not to be interpreted as a pitch for corporal punishment. I never had much of a spanking arm myself, and my gentle wife never seemed to need one.

Curiously, though, at the rare times when our young reproach us, it is not for strictness but for having been too soft with them in their formative years. We shouldn't have stood for as much backchat, and we should (now they tell us!) have made them work harder around the place.

Moreover, we're give to understand that any number of their friends hold similar opinions about their own upbringing, and insist they will raise their children more rigorously.

I'm not sure how we should interpret this trend. But it could mean a return to the mores of our grandfathers, who, as you may recall, neither spoiled the child nor spared the rod.

ON THEIR WAY to Ottawa and Toronto to represent the province at National 4-H Conference, these 14 B.C. 4-H members were presented Monday with delegate pins by Agricultural Minister F. X. Richter. Jan. 27 Opening For Legislature

Times Legislative Reporter

Federal election? What federal election?

Premier W. A. C. Bennett today announced the provincial legislature will open again Jan. 27.

The premier was reported to have brushed the federal election from his mind and dived into provincial affairs again. He was busy with his deputy finance minister all morning going over estimates in preparation for his budget speech about mid-February.

WEEK LATER

The third session of the 27th parliament of B.C. will open on the traditional Thursday but about a week later than usual.

The slow start apparently is needed to give the premier and his ministers a little extra time to catch up on the pre-session routine of estimates and legislation proposals because they have fallen behind as a result of overseas trips and electioneering.

Prospects at the moment appear to point at a normal length of about six to eight weeks for the session and a series of major spending announcements — seldom the stuff of controversy—are expected to take up most of the time.

Speaker William Murray, of Prince Rupert, has been in Victoria frequently during the past two weeks and he will be followed in about six weeks' time by the other out-of-town members.

The Throne Speech read by Lieutenant-Governor George Pearkes will be heard by 33 Social Credit MLAs, 14 New Democratic Party members and five Liberals — as well as the usual crush of leading citizens of the B.C. community.

'HABITUAL' HEARING ON DEC. 9

A hearing will be held Dec. 9 to determine if a 26-year-old Victoria man is an habitual criminal.

The date for the hearing was set in central court today.

John N. L. Smith faces a lifetime in jail if Magistrate J. A. Byers finds he is an habitual criminal. The hearing had been postponed numerous times to allow Smith to appeal his most recent conviction all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Workmen are checking underwater valves, doing pressure tests, surveying the hull and overhauling the ship's four engines. Members of the ship's company pitch in too—unusual for an RCN ship—because of the specialization required on the overhaul. Sub will be back in action after Christmas. (Times Photo.)

4-H Winners Off To East For Conference

A group of 14 young farm people, representing 4-H clubs from various parts of B.C. left Victoria Monday for the National 4-H Club conference in Ottawa and Toronto Nov. 11-17.

The party, which includes five Island delegates, is accompanied by Wayne Wickens, 4-H Club specialist; Rosemary Meadows, home economist, and Murray Soder, extension division, Kamloops, all employed by the B.C. department of agriculture.

Island representatives are Reg. Hoole, 5842 Oldfield Road; Jean Money, Sooke; Anne Lees, 4003 Bow Road; Beverley Feather, Nanaimo, and Bruce McKinnon, Alberni.

The delegates won the trip to Ottawa and Toronto at provincial 4-H competitions at Tranquille this summer. They were selected for their 4-H work, general knowledge and leadership qualities.

The conference will open in Ottawa where young people from Canada's 10 provinces will discuss citizenship and agricultural problems.

MEET VANIERS

During their stay they will be received by Governor-General and Mrs. Vanier, visit the Parliament Buildings, National Art Gallery and other points of interest.

They will be in Toronto on Nov. 15 wheer the conference will continue with discussions around the theme "To understand our role in developing sound government for the future."

They will visit the Royal Winter Fair, the largest fair of its kind in North America, the Royal Ontario Museum and tour the Niagara Falls area.

Prior to leaving for the east, the young delegates toured Victoria, visied the Legislative Buildings and met Agricultural Minister Frank Richter.

They were also received Monday at Government House by Lieut.-Governor G. R. Pearkes and Mrs. Pearkes.

BUSINESSMEN PROTEST TRAFFIC CLOSURE PLAN

Victoria city council will reconsider plans to close a block of Bastion Street to all but pedestrians because businesses have protested.

Arguments put forward today by Humber's furniture and a Bank of Montreal branch manager were supported by results of a city engineering parking survey.

Approaches were made to Bastion Square redevelopment committee, which proposes closing the block of Bastion between Government and Langley to make a pedestrian walk into the square.

Bruce Humber said a private traffic survey showed that on Oct. 26 an average 97 cars per hour used the one-way street between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m.

The block has five 12-minute parking meters which were used by an average of 5.3 cars an hour for seven hours Oct. 28, the engineer's survey showed.

"This is quite a surprise," Mayor R. B. Wilson said, suggesting that an attractive entry to the square might be created while retaining the street for traffic.

He said Humber's brief favoring vehicle and pedestrian access with an arch, kiosk, hanging baskets and flags around the entrance "makes a great deal of sense."

The committee asked engineering consultants Willis and Cunliffe to make an alternative suggestion for the use of Bastion Street.

Mayor Wilson said the idea of redevelopment is to keep business healthy, and the only objective in closing the street to traffic was to make an attractive entry to the square, which still may be accomplished.

Joseph Cunliffe said he felt the street would be seriously impaired as a pedestrian way if vehicle use is allowed.

Comptroller-treasurer James Bramley said people will have to get away from the idea of "driving right up to the door."

Proposed downtown mall development, perhaps within five years, will cause a change in thinking of people now dependent on parking meters, he said.

"Street parking is essential to the business of a bank," said George Maycock, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Government and Bastion.

He pointed out meters have already disappeared from the west side of Government outside the bank.

LIKES MOONEY

Former Clerk Won't Run In Mayoralty

Defeated Monday in his first bid for political office, former city clerk Frank Hunter today said he would not run for mayor next month.

He dashed speculation after admitting he had been approached to seek the office when Mayor R. B. Wilson steps down.

Mr. Hunter said he would feel unhappy opposing Ald. M. H. Mooney who is seeking the mayor's seat.

APPROPRIATE

Ald. Mooney has been 14 years as an alderman and is regarded as the senior city alderman and it is appropriate he should seek the mayor's seat, Mr. Hunter said.

He would not be unwilling to assist Ald. Mooney in his campaign, he said.

Ald. Mooney, a Social Credit candidate in the 1963 federal election, was at Mr. Hunter's headquarters Monday night.

Break-In Trial Launches Fall Assizes

The Fall Assizes opened in Victoria Law Courts today with the trial of Gerald Brune, Sidney Travers and Russell Bowcott on a charge of breaking and entering and stealing a safe from the Fairfield Pharmacy, 300 Cook Street.

The break-in occurred on July 6 last.

Crown prosecutor in the trial is Louis F. Lindholm. Alan Bigelow is defending Brune. Dermod Owen-Flood is appearing for Travers and Bowcott.

The case is being heard by a judge and 12-man jury.

Scheduled for hearing Nov. 15 at 11 a.m. is the trial of Mary Jean Bilton, 3138 Cook Street, charged with manslaughter involving the death of her six-month-old baby girl last June.

View Royal Estimates 'Way Out'

Campbell Raps Group Trying to Form Town

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell today went out of his way to slam efforts of a group urging incorporation of View Royal as a separate municipality.

The minister came into the press gallery at the Legislative Buildings to tell reporters the group's estimates of cost for civic staff salaries "are completely out of line."

An inquiry appointed by his department recommended that the unorganized View Royal area amalgamate with Esquimalt municipality but the separate incorporation group is competing for ratepayers' approval.

NO APPLICATION

Mr. Campbell said an estimate of less than $6,000 annual salary for a municipal clerk-assessor-treasurer was so far below the going rate in Greater Victoria for comparable work that he did not think anyone would apply for the post.

He added a doubt that any individual "would have so many talents" or want the responsibilities of a post involving all three jobs.

"They also suggest some sort of engineer-works foreman-building inspector, again at a salary estimate that is way too low," he said.

The minister said the group's report was not submitted to him but he happened to obtain a copy and was making his remarks as a matter of public interest.

The ratepayers will have to decide for themselves whether they want amalgamation or separate incorporation, he said.

Either course will require a favorable vote before it can be implemented.

Feathered Friends Flocking

Cockatoos and cardinals, pintails and parakeets will be star attractions at a two-day bird show next week, sponsored by the Vancouver Island Cage Bird Society.

Other feathered features of the event, to be held Nov. 19 and 20, will be several breeds of budgies and canaries, including the colorful Red Factors.

A dazzling display of tropical birds will also be on show, ranging from exotic sulphur-crested cockatoos to tiny, brilliantly plumaged fire finches.

The show, the 14th annual held by the society, is expected to attract over 200 entries from up-Island and possibly some from mainland breeders.

VANCOUVER JUDGE

Judge for the budgerigar section will be Mrs. Rose Miazga of Vancouver, and Vern Davidson, a local bird breeder, will judge the canaries and the foreign bird section.

A competition for the most attractive display of birds will be judged by representatives from the Victoria Daily Times and the Daily Colonist.

The show, to be held in Norway House, 1110 Hillside, will be open to the public from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. Friday, Nov. 19, and from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday, Nov. 20.

Help Score 'Fair Share' Goal

United Appeal total edged over the 80 per cent mark this morning with $352,871 in the fund—an increase of $800 since Monday afternoon.

The percentage — 80.3 — is just enough to show on the books and demonstrate that the campaign really is four-fifths of the way along towards its $439,210 target.

The United Appeal booth at Yates and Douglas, staffed Monday by the Victorian Order of Nurses, collected over $200 from downtown contributors.

A particular pat on the back was delivered to Appeal headquarters on the weekend by a caller who asked that her name be withheld.

A Wedgewood Avenue resident, she had never met "nicer, more efficient or politer" youngsters than the members of the Oak Bay Chapter, Order of DeMolay, who were helping with the residential canvass in the district.

Most recent Appeal citizenship award is a plaque which goes to the Social Welfare Department of the city, 1947 Cook, for the second time for $256 contributed by 12 of their employees.

Fifth time winner of the plaque award is Crystal Springs Beverage Company, which scored a $170 donation from 17 of its employees.

Doctors Disagree In Impaired Case

A doctor testified in central court today that some evidence given by another medical practitioner in an impaired driving case was "rubbish, just rubbish."

Dr. John H. Patterson was giving evidence for the defence in the case against Ronald Sjodin, 659 Grenville. Sjodin was arrested for impaired driving on Douglas Oct. 4.

At the conclusion of Dr. Patterson's evidence the Crown prosecutor, John McIlree, said the doctor had made such "sweeping statements" that he wanted to study a transcript of what was said before cross-examining.

The case was adjourned to Nov. 30 for completion.

DIABETES

Dr. Patterson said he has examined Sjodin and diagnosed him as suffering from previously undetected diabetes.

Dr. Patterson said there is no way for a man with undiagnosed diabetes to be tested to determine if he is impaired by alcohol.

He said the symptoms of too much insulin in a person are similar to the symptons of intoxication with the exception of the smell of alcohol on the breath.

Dr. Patterson dealt with various symptoms that Dr. E. L. McNiven, the police doctor, noted in Sjodin shortly after the accused's arrest.

Dilated pupils in themselves are not evidence of impairment, said Dr. Patterson. He also said that a flushed face could be due to untreated diabetes.

A swaying on the part of the accused may have been due to an ear disease that affected Sjodin's balance.

He said bloodshot eyes were probably caused by hay fever.

Dr. Patterson said Sjodin has the scars of a shoulder injury and this injury may account for the fact he was unable to perfectly perform certain co-ordination tests.

DEPARTURE DELAYED BY KASHMIR DISPUTE

Graduate from Uvic to Teach in India

BILL HOGGARTH

University of Victoria arts graduate Bill Hoggarth, 3238 Eldon Place, leaves Vancouver Friday to take a teaching position in India under the auspices of the Canadian University Service Overseas.

He is one of 18 Canadian university students whose departure to India was delayed in September because of the border dispute with Kashmir.

★ ★ ★

At that time the volunteers underwent an intensive two-week orientation program.

CUSO, the Canadian counterpart of the American Peace Corps, each year takes applications from qualified persons for appointments overseas.

Earlier this year four University of Victoria students were sent to Africa to teaching posts.

★ ★ ★

Dr. John Ogelsby of the University of Victoria, who accepts applications on behalf of CUSO, said the students' letters home so far are "very encouraging."

Dr. Ogelsby pointed out that CUSO volunteers need not be university graduates, but they must be trained or skilled in some profession.

★ ★ ★

He said volunteers must either be single or married without children.

In the case of a married couple both the man and wife must be trained.

Canada pays the travelling costs of the volunteers and they are then paid by the host country on a similar scale to what a person in that country would receive.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

(Times News Services)

Canadian editorialists reflected much of the forebodings that rippled across much of the country today, in the wake of Monday's general elections.

Whatever their own political leanings, editorials in leading Canadian newspapers expressed gloom that the voters had in effect preserved the status quo—but with a few changes that could be vital in the future.

Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—There should be little comfort for any political party in yesterday's election results. True, the Progressive Conservatives improved their position and showed unexpected strength in Nova Scotia and Quebec. True, the New Democratic Party increased its popular vote, and the Creditistes held up better than expected in Quebec. But these may very well have been more the voters' expression of dissatisfaction than of satisfaction. As for Social Credit this election has all but finished it as a national party. Prime Minister Pearson's Liberals can only consider the result to be defeat. Rather than getting the majority they sought, they are no better off than before the election, and they can expect rougher treatment than ever from the opposition.

If there was a real winner yesterday it must have been the Canadian voter, who showed in the only way he could that he will no longer tolerate the kind of political representation he has been getting.

Toronto Globe and Mail: The Liberal party subjected the electorate to the most sophisticated, the most premeditated, the most cold-blooded blackmail this country has ever seen in an election. . . We shall demand much more of our members of Parliament than the ugly, shallow squabbling for microscopic political ends that has far too often characterized the last two parliaments. They are all on probation before a country that is sick and tired of cynicism and littleness, and that will insist that every manjack of them this time earn his $18,000 a year.

Winnipeg Free Press (Ind. Lib.): As he faces the task of once more forming a minority government Mr. Pearson is confronted by some hard and unpleasant truths. One of these truths is that, despite repeated warnings and danger signals dating from the government's first budget, he has failed to act decisively when everything but his personal loyalty to friends has argued that he should. A second is that he has left far too much power and control in the hands of a small group of elected and non-elected officials whose views are at variance with those of the majority of the Liberal party and the nation as a whole. . . A third hard truth, the most painful of all, is that Mr. Pearson must re-examine his own position as leader of the government and try to decide whether in the not too distant future he should pass the mantle on to younger and stronger hands.

EDMONTON JOURNAL—Mr. Pearson's reckless gamble has proved an utter failure. The cynical double-talk in which he indulged when he called a totally unjustified election . . . has backfired. Mr. Pearson's personal political future has been placed in jeopardy. And, as an infinitely more regrettable development, national unity stands in greater peril than ever with another minority government heavily overweighted by its Quebec representation. . . . No one knows how long the nation will be spared another election. In the next election, it seems unlikely that either Mr. Pearson or Mr. Diefenbaker will lead his party. And a very good thing for Canada that will be.

CALGARY ALBERTAN (Ind. L)—The real loser, we suggest, has been the nation. It has given itself another parliament of minorities, the third in a row. Neither the performance of the last two nor the lessons of history make that a reassuring prospect. . . . It is hard to escape the feeling that our country, while economically healthy, is chronically ill politically.

VANCOUVER PROVINCE (Ind.)—This election . . . proved one thing: Prime Minister Pearson's failure as a national leader. . . . The electorate could not stomach the idea of giving the Pearson administration (with its 30-month record of ineptitude) a go-ahead signal. . . . If the Liberal administration decides another election is necessary within a short period, Mr. Pearson's days as party leader must be numbered. . . . But with another weak Liberal government the NDP may force through socialistic measures as the price of its support.

Regina Leader-Post (Ind.)—When Prime Minister Pearson announced the election protests were voiced from many quarters that the vote was unnecessary and that he should have waited at least until redistribution had been put into effect. The outcome confirms the validity of this criticism. In consequence, we have another indecisive result, another stalemate. The two welfare gimmicks, the Canada pension plan and the promise of a national medicare plan, failed to have the influence on the electors the Liberal government apparently hoped they would . . . those who succeeded in winning elections should not permit themselves to forget what is painfully evident, that the conduct of the members, and particularly those representing the major parties in the last parliament, was responsible to a large degree in bringing about Monday's indecisive result.

Saint John Telegraph-Journal: The election that nobody wanted had solved nothing . . . the salient thing that emerged from this ill-conceived election is that neither major party leader is strong enough to capture the imagination and full support of the country. Clearly the odds are one or both have fought their last election.

Vancouver Sun (Ind.-Lib): By assuring another minority government, the Canadian election has produced the worst possible result. But its meaning is quite clear: the nation has refused for the third time a vote confidence in any leader or party. Where does that leave us? It leaves us with a Liberal government still in a minority but entitled to meet parliament and hear the verdict which the people failed to deliver. Parliament and only parliament must now decide whether the government shall remain in power or not and on what terms.

Voters Get Tour After Poll Visit

Getting voters to accept free rides to the polls is hard enough.

Getting them home again can be harder.

Weary "ory drivers reported that in several cases, after voting, their passengers asked to be driven to department stores or doctor's offices.

But because these were mainly pensioners who rarely get a chance to ride downtown, said Victoria Conservative manager Foster Isherwood, the drivers complied.

"In most cases the rides were deserving," he said. But there were some who themselves own cars and some who lived only a block from the polls, who also called for transportation.

Mr. Isherwood said his party had a larger working force — 300 to 400 workers and 40 to 60 cars, but there was a rush all day. During the morning the operation was an hour behind and the candidate Clifford Waite even drove a few trips himself.

It's a Dark, Dreary Day For the 700-Odd Losers

By GERALD WARING

OTTAWA—No matter how brightly the sun is shining where you are, this is a dark and dreary day for an awful lot of politicians and their partisans.

Waring

And so to a great number of good losers we dedicate this column—to party leaders who gave their utmost in a punishing campaign, to 700-odd vanquished candidates including many who would have done well in and by the Commons, and to thousands of citizens who volunteered their services to parties and candidates.

Because this is a sad day for them, let's skip the post-mortems long enough to look at the lighter side of things. Like when George Hees, the gentleman farmer from St. James St., sought to woo the vote of a Northumberland farmer.

"Mighty fine Guesnseys you got there," said Hees admiringly. "Just about the nicest I ever seen."

"Holsteins," the farmer replied laconically. "And the verb form is 'saw'."

★ ★ ★

Both Conservative leader Diefenbaker and Liberal leader Pearson suffered embarrassing memory lapses: They forgot the names of the candidates in whose support they were speaking.

At Brownsburg, Que., Mr. Diefenbaker wound up a speech by asking all present "to send to Ottawa—and I can well use him there—my old friend Roger . . . uh . . . ah . . . and you know and I know that Roger will do a good job as your MP in Ottawa."

In Vancouver Mr. Pearson was extolling "a young man, but a man who already has made his mark, a man who I know will represent you well in Ottawa . . . uh . . . ah . . . your Liberal candidate."

Most of Mr. Diefenbaker's boo-boos were in Quebec. At one meeting he spoke glowingly of Tory candidate Antonio Ricard—only he persisted in calling him Rivard. And at Trois Pistoles he was introduced, in French, to several local Tories: "Ici Monsieur Valiquette." "Comment allez vous, M. Valiquette." "Et M. Blanchard." "Plaisir, M. Blanchard." "Et mon fils (my son)." "Grand plaisir, M. Monfils."

Among the more memorable lines were Socred leader Robert Thompson's declaration that politics should be kept out of the House of Commons, and Tory Frank McGee's comment that "Pearson promised to challenge the bold and test the daring, but he only succeeded in trying the patience."

Even Grits grinned wryly at Tommy Douglas' quip that Mackenzie King had shown the job of prime minister could be a lifetime one, that Diefenbaker had shown anyone could be prime minister, and that Pearson had shown that we don't need a prime minister. But, they point out, that was after Douglas was bitten by that dog in B.C.—not the dog, incidentally, whose name got on the voters' list.

Since comedian Rich Little worked over "My fellow Canadians," Mr. Diefenbaker had dropped that salutation. "Ladies and gentlemen," he started one meeting. Hecklers set up a whoop and holler. Dief swiveled and pointed. "I didn't have you in mind," he said.

Saddest story is of the candidate, a man who rarely takes water neat, who was impersonated by a person in a bar. This miscreant collected free drinks while propounding his "platform" and promising his well-wishers government jobs and other boons after he was elected.

Made the real candidate very angry. And thirsty.

The answer to the problem of feeding the undernourished millions of Asia, Africa, Latin America and other parts of the world does not lie solely in raising more food. There is also the question of how the purchasing power of people like these residents of an impoverished village in Rhodesia can be raised sufficiently that they can afford a better diet.

Our Starving World: A Statistician's View

By P. V. SUKHATME

(Mr. Sukhatme is director of the statistics division of the United Nations' Food and Agriculture Organization. These are excerpts from an article in the Indian and Foreign Review of New Delhi.)

It is a well-known fact that nutritional levels in large parts of Asia, Africa and Latin America are very low and that over the last decade no significant progress has been made in raising them. Increases in food production, substantial as they were, have been largely wiped out by increases in population.

The population is growing at an accelerating rate, adding every year over 50 million people to these areas. Simultaneously, largely arising from growing political consciousness, people are clamoring for improved levels of living, and in particular for more and better food at prices within their reach.

There are many aspects to the problem: the facts about the current level of diet, the inadequacy to ensure a healthy, active life to the people, the number of sufferers from hunger and malnutrition, the immediate need to make good the deficiencies in the diet, the possibilities of raising the needed food, etc.

The salient feature regarding the current levels of diets is that the diet in the poor countries consists predominantly of cereals and starchy roots amounting to an average consumption of nearly 600 grams per person per day.

The rich countries on the other hand, while consuming even a larger quantity of cereals and starchy roots, consume twice as large a quantity of fruits and vegtables and six times as large a quantity of animal products. This large disparity is reflected in the differences in the calorie and nutrient supplies.

Diet Monotonous

This shows that the poor countries consume around 2,150 calories per person per day with 77 per cent of the calories derived from carbohydrate foods (cereals, starchy roots and sugar), emphasising the monotony of the diet for large sections of the population. Against this, the food consumed by the rich countries provides over 3,050 calories per person per day—the share of cereals, starchy roots and sugar being only 57 per cent. More striking is the contrast in animal protein per person per day, which is only one fifth of the consumption per head in the rich countries. The disparity in other nutrients is also large.

How inadequate are the current levels of diet? To answer this question we must first define hunger. The term covers both undernutrition and malnutrition but is sometimes used in the sense of undernutrition only.

Undernutrition means inadequacy in the quantity of the diet, that is, in calorie intake. Continued over a long period, undernutrition results either in loss of normal body weight or reduction in physical activity, or both.

This definition is strictly appropriate to adults, not to children. For children, the consequences of low calorie intake are unsatisfactory growth and physical development and a reduction in the high degree of activity characteristic of healthy children.

Active Life

Malnutrition means inadequacy in the nutritional quality of the diet which if made good enables a person to lead a healthy, active life.

More precisely, it denotes inadequacy of one (particular) or several essential nutrients. Serious shortages of nutrients may result in clinical signs of specific deficiency diseases; minor degrees of deficiency contribute to poor general health (subclinical malnutrition).

Studying the results from the different countries I have reached the conclusion that at a very conservative estimate 20 per cent of the people in the less developed areas are undernourished.

The adverse effects on health of such undernutrition cannot be emphasized too strongly. Observations show that undernutrition may change the whole manner of life of people and is responsible for loss of body weight, insufficient physical effort and increased morbidity, and in its most serious degree may lead to death from starvation.

Thus, the facts that between 1,000 to 1,500 million people in the underdeveloped areas are either hungry or malnourished and that the population is growing at over 2 per cent per annum stress the need for immediately increasing food production. As a spur to this action and in order that nations may have a measure of the task that confronts them FAO has formulated nutritional goals of two types.

First Step

The short-term goals are but a first step looking as far ahead as the years 1980 in what must be a continuous effort to achieve an improvement in health through better nutrition.

The long-term goals do not provide any final answer either to the problem of hunger or malnutrition but give some idea of the scope for improvement in diet as the problem of poverty and scarcity becomes less acute. They are relevant for planning purposes, looking as far ahead as the year 2000.

The food basket available today in the less developed countries is hardly four-fifths of the diet represented by the short-term goal. The deficit is particularly large in protective foods whose availability per person is only three-fourths of what is nutritionally desirable under the short-term goal of nutrition.

If in addition to providing for the needs of the growing population we are also to remove hunger and attempt a modest improvement in the quality of diet to meet the needs of the vulnerable groups the total food supplies of the underdeveloped countries would have to be increased by over 89 per cent by the year 1980.

The attainment of the short-term and long-term goals of nutrition pre-supposes that the additional supplies of protective foods and in particular animal products would be administered to the needy. Such feeding programs have been successfully undertaken in the developed countries through the school clinics and the hospitals. Even in the developed countries, excellent work has been done by UNICEF and other organizations in distributing skimmed milk powder to pre-school children and to other vulnerable groups.

Mike Won Election; Dief the Campaign

By PETER C. NEWMAN

PRINCE ALBERT—There can be no doubt about it: the Liberals won the election but John Diefenbaker won the campaign.

He fought against odds that even in retrospect, look impossible. Only two months ago it seemed preposterous to suggest that this elecion would be anything more than a political obituary for that stubborn old politician from Prince Albert.

But he proclaimed his fifth "appointment with destiny," and he almost met it.

His failure to pioneer any dynamic new solution to Canada's problems, mattered little to Canadian electors.

His appeal rang true, and that was what counted.

There was little logic or structure in his speeches, but he was angry with what had been happening in Ottawa under the Pearson administration, and this, it turns out, was also the prevailing mood of the nation.

In his campaign John Diefenbaker took the risk of exposing his illusions to the test of reality. He fought on a platform which advocates the "One Canada" concept of Confederation which according to all the experts is impractical, obsolete and dangerous. But five of Canada's 10 provinces accepted it to the extent that they elected only two Liberals between them. And even Quebec did not wholly reject the Diefenbaker approach.

He stood as the champion of a way of life that was supposed to have disappeared in the affluent 60s. Yet the pioneer, Protestant ethic still seems to have a powerful hold in this country, and it rebelled against the Liberal government's cavalier treatment of the scandals.

Rural Appeal

John Diefenbaker directed his message to the rural, elderly and economically underprivileged sectors of the voting public. Obviously this appeal achieved considerable resonance with a wider audience.

All through his campaign, Diefenbaker stressed that "the Pearson brand of Liberalism" was not "in the great tradition of Laurier, Mackenzie King and St. Laurent." This attempt to implant a seed of doubt into the thinking of partisan Liberals was at least partially successful. At the same time, Diefenbaker was claiming that under the Pearson administration, a wedge had been driven between the government and the people.

It was this last appeal which probably did the most damage to the Liberal cause. The Pearson administration in fact was not a people's government but a regime of well-meaning technocrats. The voters sensed this alienation, interpreted it as arrogance, and opted against it.

John Diefenbaker's triumph remains only a half victory, because he is still far removed from any return to power. But he has gained at least two momentous personal achievements. He has vindicated himself with the Canadian people, and he has once again established his control over the Conservative party.

As always, John Diefenbaker remains a triumphant assortment of paradoxes. He is the only prime minister in Canadian history who never was granted the magic stamp of legitimacy by the nation's political and economic "establishments." While in office, he shocked the fastidious and amused the detached.

But on the hustings, he remains the champion. And the roots of political power in this country still lie close to the ground.

Famous Last Words

Saint Paul
(?-67 AD)

A converted Jew of Tarsus, he founded many churches before being martyred by Nero. At the last, he wrote: "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith!"

Sir Thomas More
(1478-1535)

As he ascended the rickety scaffold, the statesman said to his attendant calmly: "I pray you, Master Lieutenant, see me safe up, and for my coming down let me shift for myself." As he knelt down to the block, he drew his beard aside saying: "This hath not offended the king."

Can You Call Reading A 'Most Essential Art?'

By ART STOTT

"THE ability to read, which we take for granted and treat so casually," says Dr. Kaye Lamb, "is one of the most essential arts that Young Canada can acquire."

Stott

This sentence introduces his patron's message for Young Canada's Book Week starting next Monday. The distinguished and erudite British Columbian, who was born in New Westminster and now holds the post of National Librarian and Dominion Archivist, elaborates his point.

"Thanks to radio, television, moving pictures and the picture magazines," he adds, "we seem to spend most of our time nowadays looking and listening rather than reading. A few people in high educational places have even predicted that reading (and writing too, for that matter) are entering a period of decline."

Then he makes a point for reading. You can pick what you want to read. When you watch and listen, you are usually subjected to something somebody else had selected for you. Your choice is restricted.

This makes pretty good sense. But does it make reading an art? The concept is a little strange to me. I have taken the ability to follow the meaning of words printed on a page to be a very useful access to information, but not an art form in itself. On the other hand, if somebody pushed the button and the surviving monkeys had to start evolving upward into humans again—assuming that monkeys survived the holocaust—reading would be a lost art for quite a time.

I'll accept as art the product of the great writers. To me that is the most understandable art form in existence. And it is understandable only because people can read. So maybe the literature of the ages is art solely because it is a participating activity, with the reader making his contribution as well as the creator. Otherwise all those who set down imperishable words could have been "mute inglorious Miltons."

Okay. But I still don't think reading is an art. Dr. Lamb won't particularly care about my convictions on that score. On the other hand, I do care about the issue he has raised relative to reading being the instrument through which people can choose. And I think it high time that we encouraged the youngsters to make that choice more critical.

Too much of the reading that is offered to us is not worth the eyestrain.

Friends of mine who get around to National Parks more often than I do, usually return home to show me pictures of cheerful and relatively tame bears stumbling around the garbage dumps established for the recreational centres. The animals paw amiably among the refuse, looking for some discarded tidbit here and another there. Close by are usually signs warning people to leave the bears alone. Bruin, according to the story, isn't vicious, but he's apt to take a long-fingernailed swipe at anyone who comes too close when he's rooting around, or he may just hug the tourist a little too vigorously in a gesture of off-handed affection.

It seems to me that you could stretch this into an analogy of what happens to a lot of youngsters turned loose on the dump heap of trash publications. They may be merely looking for a tidbit here or there, but they can become dangerous to the unsuspecting person in the course of their foraging. Also the dump heap diet imparts to them the threat of infection.

Dr. Lamb calls reading an art and he appears to consider it essential because it provides the individual with a means of choice. This could be so, but unless some cultivation is done to refine the choice, mere access to variety isn't going to do much that is constructive. Young Canada, for instance, could make a wide selection in smut from the available material.

I happen to believe that the way to handle this problem is to develop in the young reader a discrimination by which he learns to separate the worthwhile from the worthless in his reading. He should be encouraged to move a shade or two above the bears browsing on the dump heap. And there is any amount of excellent sustenance for him in the better class of reading at hand today.

If he turns to it, as I hope Young Canada's Book Week will encourage him to turn, then he should refine his selectivity still further..

Among what adults take to be acceptable literature there is still a super-abundance of thought content no better than that selected for the consuming public by other media involved in commercial communication.

If there is any hope of reading becoming an art, the critically faculty is the characteristic which will make it so.

Independence for 'Guyana'

By J. HALCRO FERGUSON

LONDON—Within a year it seems that a new South American nation will be born, and called Guyana, but that its conception will be without the co-operation of the leader of its largest political organization.

For when the British Guiana Independence conference was held here last week the chair set for Dr. Cheddi Jagan, ex-prime minister and leader of the People's Progressive Party, (PPP) was empty.

Britain invited three delegates and three advisers from each of the self-governing colony's three major parties. The present prime minister, Forbes Burnham, arrived with his colleagues of the People's National Congress, and Peter D'Aguiar brought his colleagues of the right-of-centre United Force Party, which is in coalition with the People's National Congress. Dr. Jagan issued a statement dissociating his party from the proceedings.

Both Founders

Dr. Burnham and Dr. Jagan were both instrumental in founding the original PPP in 1953, on a platform of universal suffrage and prompt independence, but Dr. Jagan's Marxist policies and pronouncements, both as premier and as a popular leader when he had been removed by the British government, alienated Burnham and other party members, who split off and founded their own party in 1958.

Though the original schism was ideological, it rapidly became a racial one, with the bulk of the predominantly urban Negro population supporting Mr. Burnham, and the majority of the predominantly rural "East Indian" population backing Dr. Jagan and his forceful American wife, Janet.

Most Indian

Of British Guiana's 560,000 people—most of them engaged in the cultivation of sugar and rice along the narrow coastal strip to the northwest and southeast of Georgetown—the Indians, numbering 267,000 are the largest and fastest-growing group.

The Africans are the next largest community, with 183,000. Most of the rest of the population consists of Europeans—principally Portuguese and British — Chinese and people of mixed blood. This heterogeneous group is mostly middle class, and its members tend to support Burnham or D'Aguiar rather than Jagan. There are also 25,000 aboriginal Amerindians, who live in the tropical hinterland and are politically negligible, though their interests are looked after by a cabinet minister who at the moment is part Amerindian.

Two Factors

Dr. Jagan's PPP has the largest following of any single party, but was defeated at the last elections by two factors: the PNC-UF coalition, and the British-imposed constitutional amendment which introduced proportional representation, favoring the coalition and causing the PPP to cry foul.

Dr. Jagan insists that proportional representation was brought in under pressure from Washington, which fears "another Cuba" in British Guiana, but the British government firmly denies that the Americans had anything to do with it.

But whatever Jagan thinks, it is plain that the two coalition parties are determined that within a year Guyana—a spelling they prefer — will become a sovereign state, and that the British government is willing to let this come to pass. What happens then depends on the actions of the absent Dr. Jagan, but both Guianese and British seem more confident of the future than would have seemed possible even a year ago.

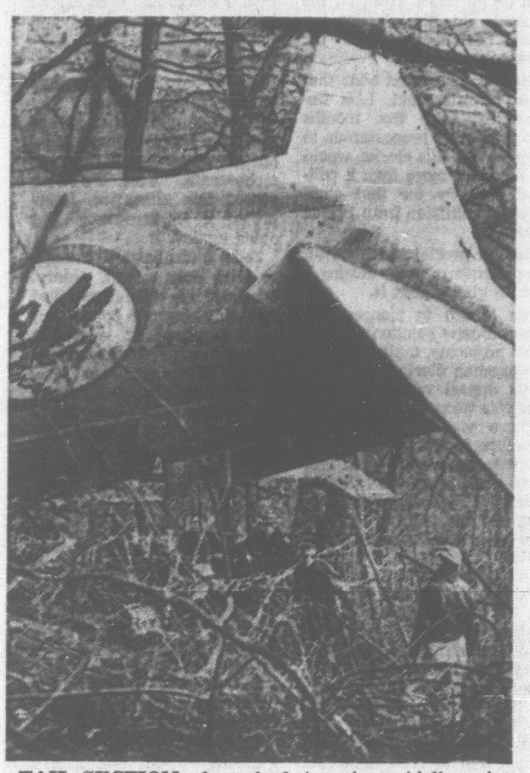
U.S. Jet Rams Hill 58 Killed, 4 Survive



TAIL SECTION of crashed American Airlines jet plane that crashed Monday night on northern Kentucky hillside is inspected by officials as study begins into cause of crash. Plane was en route from New York to Cincinnati. (AP Wirephoto.)

CINCINNATI, Ohio (AP)—A jet airliner within landing sight of the runway crashed and exploded during a thunderstorm Monday night, killing 58 of the 62 persons aboard.

Five persons were thrown clear of the exploding wreckage. One died in hospital. Four lived, but one is in critical condition.

The American Airlines 727 from New York City smacked near the top of a 300 - foot wooded hillside a mile and a half from Cincinnati airport.

The crash was the third major air disaster in the world in less than a week. Last Wednesday an Argentine Air Force C-54 crashed near Costa Rica killing 68 and a French military DC-3 went down in French Somaliland killing 30.

In Monday night's disaster, the wreckage flashed flames into the sky for hours. Workers, certain no one lived in the melted metal, waited for fires to subside before searching for bodies.

The plane was barely visible in a downpour, with flashes of lightning, said Mrs. Ralph Sprague, who lives nearby. "The runway is just over the top of the hill," she said, "and the plane banked like it was heading for it, but it was very low and dropping fast.

"I knew it was going into that hill and I started screaming before it hit."

FINAL APPROVAL DUE MONDAY IN OAK BAY

Fluoridation Bylaw Readied

Oak Bay council is expected to give final reading on Monday to a bylaw which will put a fluoridation referendum before voters Dec. 11.

Council gave first readings to the bylaw May 25 when it passed unanimously.

Votes on fluoridation of water supplies have been held in 72 B.C. communities since 1954.

And 25 have said "yes." A 60 per cent vote in favor is needed to pass the measure.

1959 VOTE

Fluoridation was a municipal election issue in Greater Victoria in 1959 when 42.3 per cent of Oak Bay ratepayers voted in favor.

It was favored by 38.4 per cent of voters in Esquimalt; 36.9 in the city, and 35.4 per cent in Saanich.

A favorable vote would add one part fluoride to every million parts water in the municipality's supply.

Cost to install fluoridation equipment is estimated at $10,000 for two units and maintenance will cost $4,000 per year.

The Canadian Dental Association's 1965 report reveals 21 per cent of Canadians are drinking fluoridated water as compared with 32 per cent in the U.S.

Island communities with fluoridated water supplies include North Cowichan, Ucluelet, Campbell River and Lake Cowichan.

LIBERALS STUDY LEADER ISSUE

By PETER REGENSTREIF

Most of the discussion surrounding the calling of Monday's election by Prime Minister Pearson in early September has dealt with the pros and cons of majority government.

It has been widely assumed, depending on the political disposition of the observer, that the government wanted the election for any number of reasons: to escape the necessity of facing further criticism in the House from a minority position; to be able to get unpopular things done; to avoid the minor party pressure on legislation; or, simply, in order to renew its mandate.

Furthermore, or so went the speculation, the Liberals thought it was a fortuitous time to have an election in view of the low popular standing of Conservative leader John Diefenbaker. Throughout the campaign, to say nothing of the 2½ years preceeding it, the focus has been on the problems of the Conservative party with regard to this crucial question of leadership.

Own Problems

These suppositions make sense. Taken by themselves they may even have provided sufficient motivation for the Liberals to have called an election. I doubt it.

All the attention given to the trials and tribulations of John Diefenbaker has obscured the fact that the Liberal party has leadership problems of its own.

The election was called to ensure as much as possible the orderly succession to "Mike" Pearson.

Examine the basic political conditions of 1965: The prime minister's public appeal was rather weak, so weak in fact that had the Conservatives managed to change their leader, they might easily have taken the measure of the Liberals under Pearson. In a minority position in the House, the government would have been badly exposed had it attempted to change horses, particularly during the period just prior to the customary leadership convention.

No Successor

Finally, and most significantly, there is no obvious successor to the mantle. Quebec Premier Jean Lesage, Defence Minister Paul Hellyer, Labor Minister Allan MacEachen and Trade and Commerce Minister Mitchell Sharp are leading contenders with Forestry Minister Maurice Sauve, Montreal MP John Turner and, now, Robert Winters being mentioned too.

For the Liberals, this is a serious departure from the norm. They deplore a knock-down drag-out public battle for the leadership.

The Liberal style since 1919 and the only real contest in the history of the selection of the party leader, is to settle the matter behind closed doors and to use the convention as a unifying device.

Change Chiefs

If possible, the question of leadership is probably of greater importance to the Grits than to the Tories who change their leaders with virtually every loss of an election. The Conservatives have had 14 leaders since Confederation; the Liberals, 6.

Even if the Liberals did not obtain a majority, the calling of an election would still buy them precious time because no one in the opposition would dare force them to the country after this last campaign for at least a couple of years.

If nothing else, this period would serve to provide the Liberals with the opportunity to settle on an heir-apparent and for a consensus to be crystallized.

This was the time-table: A Pearson victory in the fall of 1965 to give Jean Lesage the chance to consolidate his government's mandate in his province in 1966 and to be in position to leave Quebec should that be necessary; no overt party politics during the centennial year; the convention in 1968; and an election to confirm the new leader with the electorate in 1969.

Unseemly Fight

Just in case an obvious successor does not emerge, the Liberals could have afforded a wild, and for them unseemly, scuffle for the leadership if they had a majority screen behind which to hide.

Furthermore, a majority would be especially valuable should a segment of the party become sufficiently disaffected over the eventual choice of the convention. In such circumstances, a strong position in the House would prevent the dissidents from trying to exercise a veto over the party by threatening to abstain or even oppose the government in a close situation.

All very neat.

Before anyone lets out with the howl that once again the Liberals were placing the needs of party before country, a word in their defence is in order.

Political Axiom

It is an axiom of politics that in a crisis, what often holds a political system together is a party which can bridge key social, regional and economic cleavages and thus prevent total disruption.

There are firm grounds for claiming that what contributed to bringing on the Civil War in the United States 100 years ago far more than anything else was the failure of any party to adequately combine north and south in some sort of coalition, however uneasy.

Given the political situation in Canada today, the Liberal party is the only one of the two major parties which can command major support in both Quebec and in English-Canada. The chasm between French and English is the historic problem for this country and, in this century, the Liberals have been the ones to bridge it.

Quebec Issue

It is true that their performance on the Prairies is poor but this is relatively momentary and can be rectified by changes in personnel and in program. Quebec is more serious.

Should the Liberal party be turned into a facade behind which factional strife is the rule rather than the exception, it is entirely possible that this would leave Quebec with no federal political home. The consequences are apparent.

Above all, the Quebecois must be made to feel that should the Liberal "custom" of alternating between French and English leaders be terminated this time—as is likely to be the case—the decision was reached only after every opportunity was given for a French-Canadian chieftain to emerge.

In short, an attempt to strengthen his party may sometimes be the most important factor in a prime minister's decision. But it does not always rest on purely partisan considerations.

In this instance, it is not difficult for the Liberals to make the case that party interest and national interest coincide.

Vancouver Gets AAU Indoor Meet

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 1966 Canadian track and field championships have been awarded to Edmonton.

The Edmonton championships will be combined with the track and field trials for the Canadian British Empire Games team.

The Amateur Athletic Union of Canada also approved at its annual meeting here the staging for the first time of a Canadian indoor track and field championship. It will be held here Feb. 15.

Lady Pro Golfers To Visit Canada

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The Ladies' Professional Golf Association of America will include London in its regular tour next summer, first time a Canadian centre has been included in the event.

Spokesmen for the group and its London sponsor announced that the tournament will be held at Sunningdale Country Club July 28-30, and will open the way for a Canadian stop to become an annual event.

Leonard Wirtz, tournament director for the association, said:

"We're not looking for another tournament in Canada, but we do hope this will become an annual stop on the tour. Since making the decision to come to London, we've had 10 requests to fill this date on the tour."

Bombers in Running For Collegiate Ace

BOSTON (AP) — The pro football bidding is under way for Bob Cappadona with three teams including Winnipeg Blue Bombers seeking to sign the 220-pound Northeastern University fullback.

Cappadona, 22, who lives in nearby Watertown, set a Northeastern rushing record of 2,064 yards in three seasons although he was sidelined in the team's final two games this year because of a knee injury.

Cappadona, who transferred closer to home after a freshman year at Notre Dame, was drafted by San Francisco 49ers of the National Football League and by Boston Patriots of the American League. Now the Blue Bombers of the Canadian League want him.

Cappadona disclosed Monday that he was entertained during the weekend by the 49ers and then was a guest at the Patriots' game with Buffalo Sunday. He said he has received an offer from San Francisco and plans to meet with Boston general manager Mike Holovak Wednesday.

"I'll talk with the Blue Bombers after I see Holovak," Cappadona said. "Then I'll weigh the three offers and make my decision."

Cappadona admitted he would prefer to play in Boston.

"We'll make Cappadona an attractive offer," Holovak said.

"I've seen him in a few games and I feel sure he'll make a good pro. He's a fine ball carrier and plays well on defence."

Tory Candidate Blames John D. For His Defeat

TORONTO (CP) — Conservative Fred C. Stinson, who ran a distant third in York Centre in Monday's election, blamed John Diefenbaker for his showing.

"The people in suburban Toronto would not support a candidate running with John Diefenbaker as his leader," he said Monday night. "If George Hees had been leader of the party, we would have swept Toronto."

The Conservatives won none of the 18 Toronto-area seats.

Mr. Stinson, who formerly sat for York Centre, was defeated by Liberal James Walker in 1962 and refused to run in 1963 after a disagreement with Mr. Diefenbaker on defence policy. Mr. Walker retained the seat Monday.

Mr. Walker polled 41,115 this time, and Mr. Stinson with 15,077 ran third behind NDP candidate Val Scott. Mr. Stinson also lost his deposit.

The 33-year-old Chapot, with a clean ride against two others in a jumpoff, received the big cup from Vice-President Hubert H. Humphrey.

Chapot's wife, also on the U.S. team, came in second in the highlight event of the six-day show, riding a French horse, Manon.

NEW GOLF BALL . . . . . . WON'T WEAR OUT

Joy in Dufferville

NEW YORK (NEA)—Anyone who has ever suffered through 18 holes of golf knows that the only thing which wears out faster than a player's patience is his ball.

But providence and science have apparently, and at last, come to the rescue of the average duffer's pocketbook. A new ball has been developed which its manufacturers insist will not cut nor lose its resiliency round after round.

Invented by non-golfer Harry Lander of Trenton, N.J., the ball — named the Long Play—is chemically produced from synthetic rubber by rearranging molecular building blocks.

Simply stated, its mother was a test tube.

But whatever its ancestry, it works—according to Lander. Single balls have lasted hundreds of rounds in tests. It will not crack, peel nor smudge and is impossible to knock off center.

The acid test for the man in the fairway, of course, is to forget his clubs and hit the ball with a hammer or another destructive instrument. Lander insists it survives even this extreme hardship without flaw.

"In fact," he says, "the only way this ball will lose its original value is if the golfer loses it in the woods."

There's a solution to that problem also. A sharp-eyed caddy.

'Integrity' Challenge Dief Plan

PRINCE ALBERT (CP)—Conservative Leader Diefenbaker said today if Prime Minister Pearson "intends to stay to meet Parliament there will be a strong challenge immediately on the question of integrity."

He told reporters the parliamentary challenge will cover a variety of things besides the Dorion inquiry into the Lucien Rivard scandal. He said other parties have spoken strongly on this subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker said if the government should be defeated on a motion of this type, "It would be the duty of the prime minister to ask the governor-general to see if another party could form a government."

On the question of integrity in government, "this is one matter" on which Social Credit Leader Thompson has spoken very definitely, Mr. Diefenbaker said.

NDP Leader Douglas has been equally strong and so has Creditiste Leader Real Caouette.

Amplifying on remarks he made in a television appearance Monday, Mr. Diefenbaker said it was "a piece of effrontery" for Mr. Pearson to say that if he did not get a majority there would be an election in a year or 18 months.

DENIES RIGHT

Mr. Pearson had no constitutional right to give this advice to the governor-general, but must advise the governor-general there is another party that can form a government, he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker, wearing a sweater under a grey business suit, met reporters in his private railway car just before lunch.

He was "rather surprised at the failure of the NDP with all the power they claim they possess in electing so few members."

He noted they had fewer seats than in 1945 when they got 28, and in 1957, when they elected 25.

"It is very obvious socialism has no appeal to the Canadian people."

Mr. Diefenbaker said he could not recall any parliamentary parallel to Monday's election outcome.

He said that in the United Kingdom in the 1846-1885 period there were a number of "uncertain" elections and a number of minority governments. But in the past, "never has there been a government stay in power with no representation in three provinces and one each in two."

Mr. Diefenbaker added: "The

'ELECTORS SPOKE' —PEARSON

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Pearson, his Liberal party virtually halted in its track by the Canadian voters, hid his disappointment Monday night and cheerfully said that Parliament would be carried on in the best interests of Canada.

There was no doubt about his disappointment. He already had a minority government and he called the election for the express purpose of gaining a majority.

"I think it's a disappointing result — naturally — because we campaigned on the issue of majority government," he said. "The electors . . . have spoken."

The 68-year-old prime minister had gone through a long, tense day, suffering from the aftermath of flu. He was tired from the campaign that had taken him 23,000 miles by air alone and the results of his efforts gave him little joy.

"But I am gratified that there were more Liberals elected than any other party," he said into a bank of television cameras just before midnight.

NOT BITTER

He showed no bitterness over his failure to get the majority.

A reporter reminded the prime minister that he had said he didn't want to head another minority government; that he would prefer someone else to do so.

"Yes, I expressed a preference for that," he replied. "But you don't always get your first preference.

"At the moment, I am still the prime minister and leader of the government and we'll leave it at that."

Barring a major victory for either the Liberals or Conservatives, many observers suggested during the campaign that this would probably be the last election for both Mr. Pearson and Mr. Diefenbaker.

HAD SETBACKS

Since Mr. Pearson became Liberal leader in 1957, he has experienced some massive ups and downs at the polls, but Monday's stand - pat results were easily the most disappointing.

When the Diefenbaker tornado of 1958 left Mr. Pearson's Liberals with only 48 seats, compared with the 105 they held previously, the resounding defeat was not surprising and the relatively new leader was not held responsible.

In 1962, the Liberals under Mr. Pearson more than doubled their representation to 99. A year later they formed a minority government with 129.

At dissolution, the Liberals were down to 127 and this campaign, costing untold millions, nudged them back to where they were two years ago.

Coalition Out, Say Leaders

(Times News Services)

Prime Minister Lester Pearson has been denied the "clear majority" he sought from the Canadian electorate in an election that took from him two of his cabinet ministers, put his own future in question, and set the possibility of another national vote within two years—or sooner.

Early today a still game, but bitterly disappointed Pearson saw these final results:

Liberals 129, Conservatives 99, New Democrats 21, Social Credit 5, Creditiste 9 and Independent 2.

The Liberals had gained only two seats numerically from the last Parliament—seats they could have won if byelections had been held to fill the four vacancies in the last election—and lost some of their brighter lights.

Only the opposition parties really gained in the vote with most of the glory—but not as much as they had hoped for—going to the New Democrats.

Standings when Pearson dissolved the last 265-seat parliament to seek a majority to "get this country rolling" were:

Liberal 127, Conservative 92, NDP 18, Socreds 9, Creditiste 13 and Independents two. There were four vacancies.

With 96 per cent of the civilian polls reported Monday night, the Liberals had 39 per cent of the popular vote. The Conservatives had 33 per cent, the NDP 18, Creditistes five, Social Credit four and others one.

With all seats reported, an astonishing 223 of the 265 seats showed no political change from 1963.

There remained a possibility that some narrowly-won victories might be reversed when results of the armed services vote are announced Saturday and added to the civilian results in each riding. There was almost no chance of this changing the minority situation.

Next Session Expected in January

A new session of Parliament is not expected to be called until early in 1966, probably in January.

The question then will be the willingness or otherwise of the opposition parties to unite on a confidence issue and overthrow the government. If this happened, Mr. Pearson could ask Governor-General Vanier for another dissolution of Parliament or suggest he call in Mr. Diefenbaker to form a government.

As the voters headed to the polls Monday the forecasters were predicting the Liberals would get a 140-seat majority. Pearson himself was confident of a clear margin over all other parties.

What turned the voters against him and yet made them so indecisive in choosing an alternative likely spells the end of the careers of both Pearson and Conservative leader John Diefenbaker.

The same 10 million voters obviously didn't want Pearson to form his long-sought majority, nor did they feel Diefenbaker was the logical alternative.

The same "no" was handed New Democratic Leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas, who had hoped for the first time that his party might stand a chance of forming a government.

The other splinter parties, Social Credit headed by Robert Thompson, and Creditiste by Real Caouette, did no better than expected.

PM to Meet Cabinet Wednesday

Pearson, maintaining a brave front despite obvious personal anguish, said his cabinet will meet Wednesday to study the results and decide on the future.

No longer with that cabinet are Agriculture Minister Harry Hays, defeated in Calgary, and Mines Minister J. Watson McNaught, sent into retirement on Prince Edward Island.

Pearson declined to discuss the possibility of a coalition with the NDP—or his own future.

"I am still prime minister and head of the government and I think I will leave it at that," said Pearson in Ottawa.

Douglas in Burnaby, B.C., ruled out coalition with any other party except in some "unforseen crisis."

Opposition leaders saw no reason why the government even in its minority position couldn't run a full four-year term, but Pearson made it clear his position hadn't changed on the need for a majority government in Canada.

In the campaign, Pearson caused an outburst of objections from all parties when he said that if his party didn't win a majority there would have to be another election in a year or 18 months.

The Liberal hope for a majority was lost early Monday night when the Conservatives made gains in the Maritimes. If they had not made wins along the Atlantic coast, the Liberals would have been in with a strong government.

They also missed out on the increased seats the forecasters said they could get in Quebec, Western Canada and Ontario.

'NEITHER WANTED AS PRIME MINISTER'

Dief, Pearson Out, Says Writer

By PETER NEWMAN

An Election Interpretive

The judgment of the Canadian people was harsh and final: They do not want either Lester Pearsor or John Diefenbaker as their prime minister.

In their fourth confrontation, neither party leader was able to make any impression in the other's stronghold. The Conservatives are back with one seat in the nation's two largest cities — Montreal and Toronto. The Liberals are down to one seat in the prairie provinces.

No national government can properly represent the nation's various interests under these conditions. It is now clear beyond any doubt that only a change in the leadership of both parties can solve the impasse.

The Liberal party must choose a leader who will have appeal in the west, as well as commanding either through himself or an appropriate lieutenant, the respect and support of the new Quebec.

URBAN AREAS

The Conservative party must find and elect a leader who can find resonance with the nation's dynamic urban areas. This is particularly urgent for the Tories, because the next election will take place following the redistribution of constituencies which will give the cities much greater proportional importance.

The pattern of the election results — the rejection of both Pearson and Diefenbaker by large blocs of regional voters—makes it clear that with different leaders either party could have carved out a handy majority. (If this had not been the case, the NDP and Socred share of the votes would have been a great deal larger.)

It's far too early to predict who these new Conservative and Liberal leaders might be, but some factors bearing on their choice did emerge out of Monday's astonishing results:

In the Liberal party, Walter Gordon and his left-wing activities have lost a great deal of prestige. It was at their urging that this election was called, and it was on their platform and strategy that it was fought.

Unless Lester Pearson exerts his considerable personal prestige in the opposite direction, the Liberal party could well be inherited by its "old guard."

MARTIN LEADS

The immediate prospect is for a handover to Paul Martin.

Two other men are definitely in the running: Mitchell Snarp, who stands in the ideological middle and could win support from some of the party's left wingers, and Robert Winters, the former St. Laurent minister, who staged a successful political comeback in Toronto.

The state of succession in the Conservative party is even more obscure. For one thing, the job isn't likely to fall open in the foreseeable future. John Diefenbaker's magnificent campaign has earned him the right, which no member of his party can now deny, to choose the time of his retirement.

Right now, George Hees is the front-runner among the

NDP Scotches Coalition Talk

BURNABY (CP) — T. C. Douglas Monday night brushed aside talk of a coalition between the Liberals and his New Democratic Party and laid down preliminary conditions for supporting another minority government.

Mr. Douglas said in an interview a minority administration would not have to implement the entire NDP platform, but must offer good legislation to improve the way of life of Canadians.

The national NDP leader said a coalition was out of the question except in "some unforseen crisis."

Declining to detail conditions for NDP support, Mr. Douglas said, however, he would put up a major battle in the Commons if there is any attempt to water down the recommendations of the Hall royal commission on health services.

During the latter stages of the campaign, Mr. Douglas said Prime Minister Pearson had tossed away two important essentials of the Hall report. Mr. Pearson was prepared to give private insurance carriers a role and had backed down on providing medical insurance for everyone at the outset.

PREMIER KEEPS ON SMILING

'People Rejected Pearson, He Must Resign'—Bennett

By JIM HUME

The lights burned late in the Legislative Buildings Monday night.

Premier Bennett, members of his cabinet—and a sprinkling of cabinet ministers' wives—were gathered to discuss the results of the election.

Most of the group were sombre, possibly recalling that the premier's plea "tell them you've had enough" had been largely ignored by the people of British Columbia.

But not Attorney-General Robert Bonner, clad in dark blue parka and lounging with a smile near the rear wall of the premier's office.

And certainly not the premier who welcomed the questions of the press with the happiest of grins.

Was he disappointed that British Columbians had not listened and sent more Social Credit members to Ottawa.

'MAKING HEADWAY'

"No, certainly not. We picked up one additional seat in the province and the popular vote shows that we are making headway."

The future?

"Prime Minister Pearson must resign. He went to the people asking for a majority and they refused to give him that majority. To gain a majority you have to earn it and the Liberals failed to earn it. The Liberals have been repudiated by the people. Mr. Pearson has no alternative but to resign."

'COME A DAY'

The future of Social Credit federally?

"There will come a day when the people will turn to Social Credit. Canadians are small "c" conservatives and were reluctant to change."

From one side of the room a photograph of the premier and Pope Paul smiled benignly on the group.

Opposite smiled a candid shot of President John Kennedy, elected five years ago yesterday, slain three years later on the streets of Dallas, Texas.

And standing out in the trophy-cluttered inner-sanctum one photograph of a Social Credit premier and a Liberal prime minister in happier, allied days.

That's the photograph of Prime Minister Pearson, President Lyndon B. Johnson and Premier W. A. C. Bennett rejoicing that the Columbia River treaty was signed at last.

LONG TIME AGO

But that was a long time ago and the smiles of yesterday had no place in the premier's office Monday night.

"He (Mr. Pearson) has no alternative," the premier said. "The people have turned him down. He must resign."

His cabinet ministers coughed and murmured agreement.

But the light still burned in the Building long after most people had called it a day and headed home into another misty year of minority government.

BONNER ASKS PROBE OF VOTE POLLSTERS

British Columbia Attorney-General Robert Bonner today called for a House of Commons investigation into political polls and pollsters.

At best, he said, political polls are pseudo-scientific predictions.

"As far as I'm concerned, the best thing they could do would be scrap them.

"The polls cast an unnatural light on electioneering. The partisan press takes whatever comfort it can find in a poll and drums it up until a gentle shower sounds like a torrent."

Pacifist Turns Self Into Pillar of Fire

NEW YORK (UPI)—A 22-year-old former seminary student and anti-war fanatic drenched himself with gasoline in front of United Nations headquarters here today and turned himself into a pillar of flame with a match. He was critically injured.

"I am a Catholic worker," murmured Roger Laporte through his blistered lips as he was rushed to a hospital through the empty streets shortly after 5 a.m. "I am anti-war, all wars. I did this as a religious action. I picked this hour so no one could stop me."

As ambulance attendants gingerly loaded him into their vehicle, the young pacifist said his act of self-destruction was a protest against "all the hate in the world."

The fire, which blackened and blistered 95 per cent of the body of Laporte, of Utica, N.Y., melted his rubber sneakers onto the pavement. But Laport, who associated with a group of draft card-burning pacifists, failed to damage his own draft card which he carried in his wallet. The 2-S (student) draft card was found on the street when he was rushed to a hospital.

'CAN'T WIN THEM ALL' SAYS PETER

TORONTO (CP)—Peter Regenstreif, the election soothsayer, laughed today when asked where he went wrong in his prediction of Monday's general election.

"You can't win them all," he said. "We pollsters merely try to infer from a small sampling the trend in a whole universe." Mr. Regenstreif, professor of political science and Canadian studies at the University of Rochester, N.Y., predicted at least 137 Liberal seats, probably 10, with 79 for the Progressive Conservatives.

He said he went off base mainly in his rural Quebec sampling.

Court Grants Shop Centre Foreclosure

VANCOUVER (CP)—Former New Westminster mayor Beth Wood, her husband John and son Barry have been given six months to pay off a $40,000 mortgage on shopping centre property in White Rock.

Mr. Justice Munroe, in granting foreclosure to National Holdings Ltd., against Villa Rock Shopping Centre Ltd., refused Monday to reduce the redemption period from the customary six months.

National Trust had asked for a reduced redemption period on the grounds that the defendants had little equity in the property.

The judge noted that the payments were only three months in arrears for a total of $1,500.

K. J. Husgand, appearing for the shopping centre said a national trust company was interested in financing the project.

HE MUST BEAT FREEZE

BEAUSEJOUR, Man. (CP)—A small aircraft was chartered today by the returning officer for Springfield to pick up ballot boxes along Lake Winnipeg before the lake freezes over.

W. Horodyski said the regular service to the northern points has been suspended until ice is thick enough to hold an aircraft and flyers say today will be the last chance to land a craft with pontoons.

Canadian-Built Beaver Planes Set Down at Pole

TORONTO (UPI)—De Havilland of Canada today announced that two of its Beaver aircraft had become the first single engined planes ever to land at the South Pole.

The aircraft manufacturer said the Beavers, operated by the Argentine Air Force, landed at the South Pole Nov. 3.

The planes made an eight-hour flight from General Belgrano Argentine air force base on the Filchner ice shelf about 800 miles from the pole.

CHINA ON RHODESIA

Negroes Advised To Take Up Arms

PEKING (Reuters)—China today advised Rhodesia's Negros to take up arms and fight for their national independence.

The Peking People's Daily, in the first major Peking statement on the Rhodesian crisis, pledged China's support for the "sacred struggle" of Rhodesia's Negroes.

The editorial echoed the theme of Peking press reports on the Rhodesian situation—that the British government is secretly collaborating with Salisbury to maintain white rule unilateral declaration of independence.

It said the recent visit of British Prime Minister Wilson to Salisbury "shows up the disgusting hypocrisy of British imperialism."

Negroes could win real independence "only through unflinching struggle and not by harboring illusions about imperialism," the editorial said.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

The weather pattern for B.C. has shown little change in the past few days and the skies will remain cloudy in all areas. However, the air over the province is not quite as moist as it was Monday and brief sunny periods were expected. Widely scattered showers will continue in coastal areas. Arctic air still remains over the central interior. The freezing rain which occurred in the Cariboo Monday changed to snow flurries overnight and Prince George had a depth of one inch of snow on the ground early this morning. This will melt today as the temperatures in the Arctic air slowly climb to above freezing.

LIBERALS STUDY LEADER ISSUE

By PETER REGENSTREIF

Most of the discussion surrounding the calling of Monday's election by Prime Minister Pearson in early September has dealt with the pros and cons of majority government.

It has been widely assumed, depending on the political disposition of the observer, that the government wanted the election for any number of reasons: to escape the necessity of facing further criticism in the House from a minority position; to be able to get unpopular things done; to avoid the minor party pressure on legislation; or, simply, in order to renew its mandate.

Furthermore, or so went the speculation, the Liberals thought it was a fortuitous time to have an election in view of the low popular standing of Conservative leader John Diefenbaker. Throughout the campaign, to say nothing of the 2½ years preceeding it, the focus has been on the problems of the Conservative party with regard to this crucial question of leadership.

Own Problems

These suppositions make sense. Taken by themselves they may even have provided sufficient motivation for the Liberals to have called an election. I doubt it.

All the attention given to the trials and tribulations of John Diefenbaker has obscured the fact that the Liberal party has leadership problems of its own.

The election was called to ensure as much as possible the orderly succession to "Mike" Pearson.

Examine the basic political conditions of 1965: The prime minister's public appeal was rather weak, so weak in fact that had the Conservatives managed to change their leader, they might easily have taken the measure of the Liberals under Pearson. In a minority position in the House, the government would have been badly exposed had it attempted to change horses, particularly during the period just prior to the customary leadership convention.

No Successor

Finally, and most significantly, there is no obvious successor to the mantle. Quebec Premier Jean Lesage, Defence Minister Paul Hellyer, Labor Minister Allan MacEachen and Trade and Commerce Minister Mitchell Sharp are leading contenders with Forestry Minister Maurice Sauve, Montreal MP John Turner and, now, Robert Winters being mentioned too.

For the Liberals, this is a serious departure from the norm. They deplore a knock-down drag-out public battle for the leadership.

The Liberal style since 1919 and the only real contest in the history of the selection of the party leader, is to settle the matter behind closed doors and to use the convention as a unifying device.

Change Chiefs

If possible, the question of leadership is probably of greater importance to the Grits than to the Tories who change their leaders with virtually every loss of an election. The Conservatives have had 14 leaders since Confederation; the Liberals, 6.

Even if the Liberals did not obtain a majority, the calling of an election would still buy them precious time because no one in the opposition would dare force them to the country after this last campaign for at least a couple of years.

If nothing else, this period would serve to provide the Liberals with the opportunity to settle on an heir-apparent and for a consensus to be crystallized.

This was the time-table: A Pearson victory in the fall of 1965 to give Jean Lesage the chance to consolidate his government's mandate in his province in 1966 and to be in position to leave Quebec should that be necessary; no overt party politics during the centennial year; the convention in 1968; and an election to confirm the new leader with the electorate in 1969.

Unseemly Fight

Just in case an obvious successor does not emerge, the Liberals could have afforded a wild, and for them unseemly, scuffle for the leadership if they had a majority screen behind which to hide.

Furthermore, a majority would be especially valuable should a segment of the party become sufficiently disaffected over the eventual choice of the convention. In such circumstances, a strong position in the House would prevent the dissidents from trying to exercise a veto over the party by threatening to abstain or even oppose the government in a close situation.

All very neat.

Before anyone lets out with the howl that once again the Liberals were placing the needs of party before country, a word in their defence is in order.

Political Axiom

It is an axiom of politics that in a crisis, what often holds a political system together is a party which can bridge key social, regional and economic cleavages and thus prevent total disruption.

There are firm grounds for claiming that what contributed to bringing on the Civil War in the United States 100 years ago far more than anything else was the failure of any party to adequately combine north and south in some sort of coalition, however uneasy.

Given the political situation in Canada today, the Liberal party is the only one of the two major parties which can command major support in both Quebec and in English-Canada. The chasm between French and English is the historic problem for this country and, in this century, the Liberals have been the ones to bridge it.

Quebec Issue

It is true that their performance on the Prairies is poor but this is relatively momentary and can be rectified by changes in personnel and in program. Quebec is more serious.

Should the Liberal party be turned into a facade behind which factional strife is the rule rather than the exception, it is entirely possible that this would leave Quebec with no federal political home. The consequences are apparent.

Above all, the Quebecois must be made to feel that should the Liberal "custom" of alternating between French and English leaders be terminated this time—as is likely to be the case—the decision was reached only after every opportunity was given for a French-Canadian chieftain to emerge.

In short, an attempt to strengthen his party may sometimes be the most important factor in a prime minister's decision. But it does not always rest on purely partisan considerations.

In this instance, it is not difficult for the Liberals to make the case that party interest and national interest coincide.

Vancouver Gets AAU Indoor Meet

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 1966 Canadian track and field championships have been awarded to Edmonton.

The Edmonton championships will be combined with the track and field trials for the Canadian British Empire Games team.

The Amateur Athletic Union of Canada also approved at its annual meeting here the staging for the first time of a Canadian indoor track and field championship. It will be held here Feb. 15.

Lady Pro Golfers To Visit Canada

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — The Ladies' Professional Golf Association of America will include London in its regular tour next summer, first time a Canadian centre has been included in the event.

Spokesmen for the group and its London sponsor announced that the tournament will be held at Sunningdale Country Club July 28-30, and will open the way for a Canadian stop to become an annual event.

Leonard Wirtz, tournament director for the association, said:

"We're not looking for another tournament in Canada, but we do hope this will become an annual stop on the tour. Since making the decision to come to London, we've had 10 requests to fill this date on the tour."

NEW GOLF BALL . . . . . . WON'T WEAR OUT

Joy in Dufferville

NEW YORK (NEA)—Anyone who has ever suffered through 18 holes of golf knows that the only thing which wears out faster than a player's patience is his ball.

But providence and science have apparently, and at last, come to the rescue of the average duffer's pocketbook. A new ball has been developed which its manufacturers insist will not cut nor lose its resiliency round after round.

Invented by non-golfer Harry Lander of Trenton, N.J., the ball — named the Long Play—is chemically produced from synthetic rubber by rearranging molecular building blocks.

Simply stated, its mother was a test tube.

But whatever its ancestry, it works—according to Lander. Single balls have lasted hundreds of rounds in tests. It will not crack, peel nor smudge and is impossible to knock off center.

The acid test for the man in the fairway, of course, is to forget his clubs and hit the ball with a hammer or another destructive instrument. Lander insists it survives even this extreme hardship without flaw.

"In fact," he says, "the only way this ball will lose its original value is if the golfer loses it in the woods."

There's a solution to that problem also. A sharp-eyed caddy.
